THE WINDOW GARDEN. Steam Engines and Boilers, Mill Machinery of all kinds: The Beautiful Hybrid Cineraria and Calcoelarias for this Purpose. The treatment of Cinerarias and Calceolarias is so nearly alike, says Lennie Greenlee in the American Agriculturist, that to GANG EDGERS, SHINGLE AND LATH MACHINES. CASTconsider them separately would occupy needless time and space. Fresh plants of both must be grown or purchased every year, as these give much finer flowers than old ones, which are also more subject to insects and disease. The seed should be sown in April, May, or June, according to the season for which bloom is desired. PIPE, VALVES AND FITTINGS Plants which are to bloom for the Christmas holidays should be in two-inch pots by the middle of July. As autumn approaches, it should be re-membered that, although Cinerarias and Calceolarias thrive in a very cool temperature, they will not endure the least touch of frost. The final transplanting should take place in September or October. Do not use sifted soil, but preferably one that is coarse and lumpy, mixed with a fourth part of well-decayed manure. When potted the plants may be brought indoors and

The prominent feature of this crate is the method of fastening the corners. The posts can not split either way being nailed through from both sides. It is best to use shaded. A pane of glass laid across the very small wire nails for the ends, clinch ing them on the inside. Use No. 4 wire nails for the sides and bottom. A crate of this kind is light and at the same time strong, easily handled and attractive in appearance. If a workshop and a few water and sour soil, they may as well be thrown away, while plants that droop from simple tools are at hand several days care too dry a soil may drop a few leaves, but will recover. When large enough to handle, prick out the small plants two inches be profitably spent in repairing old crates and making new ones, A fruit grower who is at all handy with tools can thus apart into wher pans or boxes of the same light soil, and transplant afterward as often as they may need it, in order to keep the leaves from touching one another. Six-inch pots will be large enough for them to bloom in. About the best place for the supply himself with crates at a cost not exceeding five to ten cents each.

Seeing Plants Grow. In the laboratory the growth of a plant may be rendered visible by attaching a part. The other end of the wire, to which is fastened a pointed piece of charcoal, pressed gently against a drum. The drum is covered with white paper and kept revolving by elock work. Of course, if the growth is stationary, a straight line is marked on the paper, but even the slightest increase is shown by the inclined tracing on the paper. By a simple modification of this arrange ment the growth of a plant can be render ed audible. The drnm must be covered by narrow strips of platinum for, say one eighth of an inch wide, and one-eight between each strip. If the strips of platinum be made to com plete the circuit of a galvanic battery to which an electric bell is coupled up, then the bell will costinue ringing while the plant grows an eighth of an inch. follow ed by silence (while the pointer is passing over the space between two strips) for the mext growth of an eigth of an inch, etc. The growth of some very rapidly growing plants, and the opening of some flowers, such as the compass plant, can be heard direct by means of the microphone. By the above means is has been proved that plants grow most rapidly between 4 and 6 a.m. -
