CITY OR COUNTRY.

What the Biographies of 19,000 Successful Men Teach. Most of the great literary men of the age have come from the country. Washington Irving was almost the only exception. He was born in New York, and did not move to the region of his most delightful work—the rural banks of the Hudson until his early youth was passed. But Hawthorne, Bryant, Long-fellow, Lowell, Howells, and scores of less important literary lights, were country born. Perhaps no person had a broader bird's-eye view of the effect of environment on successful men than the editor of Appleton's "Cyclopedia of American Biography." Nineteen thousand biographies are covered in the work, and with them all he is familiar to an extent that seems incredible to an outsider. He analyzes what they seem to him to of the world are developed better by of city life, exclusively in cities, the | don Farmers' Advocate. stock is weakened and it is necessary to go back to the soil for reinvigoration. A general application of this rule-going back to the soil-is impossible, however, for the fact that we have stated has been tacidly recognized by Americans and country or outdoor life of one kind or another is playing a more important part in the lives of residents of cities. Thus the balance is kept even. Put in its simplest form, the country boy in the city will be outstripped at first, but in many cases he has greater staying power. His children, however, will have less, if they are kept in the city. The best naterial in business or the professions is country stock developed by city ex-perience, and most of the successful nen in the cities have the country beaind them. It is to the influence of country life as understood at present that a very large part of the force of the younger generation in the cities is due. in the term country life should be included the outdoor sports and summer outings, which are now generally within the reach of city boys. In a way the fable of Antaeus answers the question."

Poultry for Farmers. The spring has been favorable and the flocks of young chicks are numerous and large on the majority of farms. The early beginning has been easy, but ail poultrymen find that the larger number of fowls in the poultry yard requires additional care to keep them healthy. disease being the great drawback to successful poultry raising. Upon some of the essentials for success a writer in the American Farmer says: There are probably very few farmers in the country who breed pure-bred poultry or who even introduce a pure-bred cockerel into their flocks once in several years, and it seems very strange that farmers should pay so little attention to their pountry. On the other hand, most farmers keep some pure-bred cattle, hogs or sheep, or at least buy a blooded animal once in a while to keep up the stock and improve certain quali-cies. Why is it that they pay more attention to all other branches of the farm than to poultry? Does are poultry pay when a lot of eggs are taken to market or a lot of spring chickens sold at ten or fifteen cents per pound? They seem to think poultry can take care of itself. Turn it out and let it pick up its own living, roost in trees and lay eggs in a haystack. What would they say if their cattle and sheep were turned loose and did not have even a shed to shelter them? "O, well, the chickens are small; they don't need much room and they can find a place to roost in the hay shed." Think these points over and reason them out, and see the benefits of introducing pure bred male birds into your flocks. Farmers ought to take as good care of their poultry as of any other branch on the farm, for there is more money in poultry for the amount invested than in any other department of the farm.

Carrots for Horses. The best variety of carrot to feed horses in winter depends upon the character of the soil. If the soil is deep and rich, then the Long Orange is a good variety. If the soil is not very deep, then the Short Horn or the Danvers carrot may be best. It should be planted with a drill. If Short Forn, drill twelve inches apart. If the Long Orange, fifteen inches apart. If the seed were all perfect, one and a quarter pounds is enough for an acre, says the Country Gentleman, but as it is often bad, three and one half to four pounds should be used. As soon as the carrots appear they should be cultivated with the horse hoe. A heavy crop of carrots some-times yields more than thirty tons per acre. It is very important that the weeds should not get a start. Carrots should be stored in a cool, dry cellar, never laid upon damp ground. They are best stored upon a plank floor, or in bins. They may be laid in piles not more than two or two and a half feet deep. When fed, it is well to run them through a cutter. These roots have an excellent effect upon the health of horses and assist in the digestion of other food. They prevent constipation in horses, give a smooth, sleek coat—that is, when fed in moderate quantities of not more than one peck per day to each horse. When the farmer first tries dairying he follows the methods of the pioneers and milks out of doors. He loses money by doing it. That it is more comfortable in winter to milk in the barn, all will concede, but the old practice of milking out of doors dried up the cows in winter and it was thought that the anopy of the skies was good enough shelter for doing all kinds of farm work. This is not true in dairying. Over and over again it is necessary to insist upon the necessity of uniformity, and the only way to secure it is to milk under shelter. A pelting storm just at milking time plays the misch'ef with out ofcor milkers. A hot evening which akes the flies ravenora, annoys the ows and the milk pail go with a light.

These 195 cows owned by these ten patrons brought their owners an average of nearly $43 per head for the summer season, which, as we have already pointed out, was not a very favorable one. Besides this, milk was used at home, and a very considerable sum additional was realized for butter made in winter, some of the farmers mentioned, we understand, being patrons of the Gladstone factory when run as a winter teach concerning environment, as fol - creamery. It would not be excessive to lows: Acuteness, sharpness, knowledge | put the total yearly return from some of these herds at an average of over $50 the friction and competition of city | per cow. > While the residents of the country live in the midst of nature's adornments, they should not permit these to repress the cultivation of those things that minister to our higher ta: > s. Within a few years the use of flowers has grown enormously. Every occasion from the cradle to the grave is marked by evidence of this kind. Very often the relations between two persons are such tout flowers are the only thing that may be sent with propriety. They may represent large value, to be sure, but a value that is entirely lost with their rapid fading. The same money put into an article whose value would not be so fleeting would never be sent by a cultivated man or accepted by a refined and right-minded woman. It may be laid down as a general rule that it is always in good form to send flowers to any one with whom pleasant, friend ly and social relations exist. On the other hand, it may be said with truth that flowers are rarely other than acceptable. - Ladies' Home Journal. Soil for Beans,

The best bean soils are what may be termed mild loams, firm in texture, deep and dry. Rich muck soils contain too much humus. Beans grown on these would make too much top. Loams, sandy in texture, and sandy soils which contain a fair amount of plant food will produce the best crops of beans. On a rich soil, manures rich in nitrogen are misapplied. Nothing but mineral manures should be used on such soils. Although rich in potash and requiring it, it is able to make a good growth without it, as without plosphoric acid-indeed the bean is relatively very rich in phosphoric acid. One hundred ane fifty pounds of muriate of potash and 350 pounds of phosphoric acid will make a fair dressing, no other or to my office. Payments made to teamsters will manure being applied. The rows should be just wide enough to use the horse to cultivate with, or some two feet, and the hills eighteen inches apart, unless the rows are made wider, when a narrower distance will answer. - Mirror and Farmer.

A New Fertilizer. In tallow melting establishmentsand there are a score of them in the city of New York-a large amount of refuse, so-called "tank water" is thrown away. It contains a valuable element, gelatine. A patent has lately been granted to Michael Golseiff of this city for a method of utilizing the above waste product. It consists in partially evaporating the tank water and then combining it with quickline in the proportion of one and one half parts of lime to each part of water remaining in the refuse after the evaporation. The mixture is then allowed to expand and dry, when it is reduced to a powdered state, and is useful as a fertilizer, containing, as the patentee ciaims, from seven to twelve per cent of ammonia and from forty to sixty receive special attention. per cent of lime. If the new process should be found practicable for adoption by the various tallow-melting manufactories, then a waste refuse of to-day will be made useful, and what is now a nuisance to public health will be abated.

-Scientific American. Salting Cows, Salting the cows is one of the little things that is sometimes lost sight of under the pressure of other and what is regarded as more important work, but a trial recently made at the Mississippi Experiment Station indicates that inattention to this point may be a rather expensive oversight. Three cows were kept without salt for four weeks and their wills record beat during the and their milk record kept during the last two weeks of this period; then they were given the usual allowance of salt for two weeks, and on comparing the milk records it was found that the cows gave 454 pounds of milk during the first period when salt was withheld, and 564 pounds during the second, when salt was furnished, a difference of 110 pounds of milk in two weeks in favor of

No Forests, Great Floods, The explanation of floods like the present one and that of 1889 is as easy as rolling off a log. There comes a heavy spring rain, perhaps of several days' duration. Instead of the natural condition of mountain sides with thousands and thousands of trees, whose foliage and trunks and roots hold the rain and allow it to flow gradually into the streams and rivers, the downpour falls upon barren places, with here and there great gullies made where the felled trees have been washed down to the rivers to save hauling, and the result is that torren's pour into the rivers in an incredibly short space of time and carry destruction in their track. The only wonder is the short-sightedness of the people who for a seemingly temporary benefit are ultimately the losers. The question of the protection of the forests of the state is one that is sure to come up for legislation very soon.—Philadel-phia Times.
