OHATHAM, N. B., - - APRIL 19, 1894

At evening when I go to bed see the stars shine overhead; They are the little daisies white That dot the meadow of the night. WELL WON.

Nantucket Jack was in a melancholy mood because there seemed to be no chance that he would ever win May Blossom, the captain's daughter. The preferred suitor was the mate, Boles, who had made a record as a whaler and stood high in favor.

So Jack longed for an opportunity to distinguish himself and this is how it came: The crew had pursued a whale of great value and almost killed it, when they saw a squall coming on. All the boats at once cut away to seek. the ship, but Jack was for holding on and refused to lose such a prize. His crew deserted him and left him to cope with the monster alone.

And now a truly desperate combat took place. Alternately working the light craft with skillful hand, and plying his lance—with the spray all around him—with the whale's flukes whipping the air about his head, and the white scroll of the jaw occasionally almost grasping the boat, Jack fought desperately with this "old king of the sea," so close to him all the time that the whale, the boat, the fishing lance and the nimble form of the young man, seemed almost blended into one. Aboard the man-of-war crew and officers were excited witnesses of this combat. The MACHINE SHOP, shrouds, the booms and all the sails were alive with blue jackets, while even those aloft, stowing canvas to prepare for the squall, kept an eye upon the strange spectacle of this one brave man struggling with so mighty an antagonist. All at once a ringing cheer rose from the seamen as Jack, planting his lance near the "life spot," caused the levia-than to spout blood. The movements of the monster now were more feeble; he swam round and round, his spout becoming lower every moment; and fin-ally, with one last, desperate flurry, he rolled over stone dead. An officer-the first lieutenant-now prang upon the ship's horseblock and roared through his trumpet:

"Leave your whale and come aboard here lively, my man," pointing with one hand, as he spoke, to the black rack of the roaring, screaming squall close But Jack shook his head; for, having obtained his prize he was resolved not to run the risk of losing it. "Ay, ay," remarked an old forecastle man; did ye ever see the like of that chap's pluck? But Davy Jones will be sure to swallow the lad in his maw, though he's escaped that of Johnny A moment later along came the squall, booming, shrieking and shrouding Jack and his whale from sight in the whirling The man-of-war was hurled far from the spot, with the ends of her lee main and foreyards, almost dipping in the seething, hissing foam, and, for a quarter of an hour, the wind blew so hard that the water was beaten down flat. At last, when the squall had passed far to leeward Captain Blossom and his crew watched in vain for the daring young harpooner, who, instead of returning to his ship, as Boles and the others had done, had refused to cut and kept on

With pale cheeks and streaming eyes May Blossom was among the watchers. A mist lay upon the ocean in the direction where her lover was last seen, and as the Meteor kept on Jack's broken steering oar and the red woolen cap he had worn were discovered and picked up.
"This tells the story," said the captain

Poor May gave a despairing cry, but just then a shout was heard coming from the mist, and the girl, with flashing eyes, arched her neck and reared her head like a young colt.

"That was Jack!" she said. And she was right. As the ship forged on the wind partly blew aside the misty curtain, showing the gallant fellow standing bareheaded in the stern sheets of his boat. By lashing the latter securely on the lee side of the whale to the barbed irons sticking in the body of the monster, he had prevented the craft from swamping in the squall. He was soon picked up, when the captain, in his joy at securing so valuable a whale after he had thought an inspector, two constables, Mrs. Sympson it was lost, fairly embraced the young and as many of the miscellaneous populace

"I see now," said the skipper, "that I mistook your character; that a quiet man—a man of few words—may have as much energy and pluck as a noisy one, and sometimes more. Boles was for cutting from the whale, but you held on, even in the face of death. You deserve a reward. Here it is.' To the side of the young man he drew blushing May Blossom, now happier than words can express, and placed her hand in that of brave Nantucket

FROM HER WINDOW

"It is getting to be an intolerable nuisance," said Brown. An indignation meeting was being held in one of the Raphael studios, Rubens road, St. John's Wood.

There were present Brown and Jones, who were the indignant persons; Bronson and Johnson, who were attentively sympathetic, and Horace, who was benevolently "It is getting to be an intolerable nui sance," said Brown.

"I agree with you," said Bronson, tapping with the end of a mahlstick under Horace's nose in a futile effort to entice him into a friendly scrimmage. Bronson was always trying to lower Horace's dignity in this fashion. "But I don't see," Bronson continued, "how you are to stop it. The old dame has a perfect right to sit at her own window, and if that window does command an uninterrupted view of your two studios

through the skylights that's the architect's fault or the uilder's or somebody's-not hers."

"Yes. But hang it, man," cried Jones, "we can't do a blessed thing without her seeing it. She knows exactly what we have for dinner, and when we come in and when we go out, and how long a bottle of whisky lasts us and how many pipes we smoke, and everything. She keeps a pair of opera glasses handy, and nothing escapes

"Yes," added Brown. "But that isn't the worst. She's just an extra eternal conscience of a most irritating kind. See here, you come in some hot afternoon after a good square meal and you look round the studio and say to yourself: 'Let the picture and everything go hang! I'm going to lie down and read a novel and smoke.' "And you have just settled yourself comfortably on the lounge in your shirt sleeves, with a cheroot and a shilling shocker, when you happen to glance up through the window-and there she is! All your peace of mind is gone. You can feel her eye upon you. That eye bores into your skull. That eye goes whispering all sorts of uncomfortable things in your ear. "'I can see you,' it says, 'you lazy, idle fellow. That picture has to be finished by the 15th. For shame! Get up and go en with your work!' "It's intolerable, I say. You can't be decently lazy with an eye like that in the neighborhood. You might just as well get married at once. It has forced me to work so abominably hard lately that I'm quite worn out. "She's up there now; she's watching us.

Just you fellows sit here for five minutes, and you'll feel the effect. Even Horace can't stand it." "Well, it must be rather awful," Johnson admitted after a furtive glance up through the skylight to the first floor window opposite, where the Eye, whose proper designation was Maria Sympson, widow, sat in white cap and bands peacefully knit-

"Awful! Awful isn't the word-it is simply maddening. Another week of it will infallibly land me in an asylum," declared "And I," said Brown, "am developing misanthropical and homicidal tendencies. I go out of my way to kick Horace; my fingers itch for a knife every time I comenear a lay figure. I fear there will be bloodshed before long."

"Ha!" exclaimed Bronson. "I have an "Bronson has an idea," said Jones. "This is indeed a memorable occasion."

"Listen," said Bronson, "this neighbor of yours annoys you; you wish to get rid of her. Well, my idea is this: Brown is to follow the promptings of his heart. Let him do it by all means." "Do what?" asked Brown. "In thename of goodness, do what?"

"What I say. Murder the lay figure, with any amount of picturesque detail, and let her—Mrs. What's-her-name—see you do it. Do you grasp my meaning?"
"Bronson," said Brown with enthusiasm, 'you are a genius!-or rather, since I went halves, we are a pair of geniuses. The thing shall be accomplished. With mine own hand will I do the gory deed." On the following afternoon the worthy Mrs. Sympson sat placidly knitting at her window. At first the two studios were

But about 3:30 Mrs. Sympson's interest was excited and her nerves startled by the sudden flinging open of Brown's door and the entry of Brown himself in a state of violent agitation. He had a letter in his hand, and he began pacing up and down the studio, alternately referring to the letter and pressing his hand wildly to his brow. Then he cried aloud in frenzied accents. She heard him distinctly, for it was a hot day and the windows were open. "Ha! Am I betrayed? Is she then false? Desperation! But I will be r-revenged!" were his words.

And he seized a large cavalry pistol which hung with other "properties" on the wall and rushed out of the room. Almost immediately a shot was heard followed by a series of shrieks and screams. These slowly died away, and then for a moment there was silence, which was again broken by a hammering at the studio door. It was burst open, and three men-Jones, Johnson and Bronson, in fact-rushed into the room and appeared to search for somebody. They went out again, but soon reappeared in company with Brown and-a something on a shutter. The something was the body of a woman clad in white, with a white cloth over her face, lying motionless upon the board. The spell that had bound Mrs. Sympson until now in chains of silent horror was loosened. She squealed and ran precipitately from the window. In a few minutes there came a violent knocking at the street door. "Open in the queen's name. Open at once, or I'll break the door down!" Brown opened. On the doorstep stood as could find a footing. "That's the man!" shrieked Mrs. Sympson. "That's the murderer! Handcuff him. inspector, before he kills anybody else." Brown and Jones now smoke their pipes and read their novels in undisturbed serenity. Mrs. Sympson has left her window severely alone ever since and is not likely to return to it in a hurry.—Exchange.

Wearing Glasses. The general adoption of the pince nez is not to be commended, for the glasses are not kept parallel to the eyes, and the spring pinches the nose so as even to leave permanent marks in some cases. It is always wiser to consult an oculist than to accept from an optician a pair of glasses on your own responsibility. Wrong glasses do more harm than good, and though the initial cost may be greater by consulting an oculist the ease and comfort obtained are incomparably greater and well repay the increased outlay.—Cassell's Magazine.
