The things which for and of each other's sake We might have had? If you and I had sat and played together, Love, Two speechless pabies in the summer weather, Love, By one sweet brook which though it dried up

Still makes for me a sweeter song to-day
Than all I know.

Of womanhood, we had first looked, and straightway, Had whispered to each other softly, ere Was dawn, what now in noonday heat and

We both forget-If all of this had given its completeness, To every hour would it be added sweetness, Could I know sooner whether it were well With thee! One wish could I more surely tell, More swift fulfill?

Ah! vainly thus I sit and ponder, Losing the precious present while I wonder, About the days in which you grew and came So beautiful, and did not know the name

THE DRUMMER'S STORY.

He was a voluble drummer from St. Louis; we were an interested party of listeners in the smoking room of a Pullman sleeper en route for Chicago, and when he pulled out his watch and remarked: "Good night, gentlemen," we begged him to stay and tell just one more story. After a moment's hesitation tion our entertainer resumed his seat and remarked: "Well, gentlemen, my stock's about run out, and this is not a good tale to go to bed on, but here

"In 1861, my uncle, Benjamin Richley, was tried, found guilty and sentenced to thirty years in the penitentiary. The alleged crime was murder; the victim one of his farm hands. "Benjamin Richley was a wealthy farmer, and his farm was located in what is now a suburb of St. Louis. He was a widower with one daughter who was, so to speak, the apple of the old man's eye. He had no other relations, or if he had, did not recognize them. The old gentleman was known to possess an ungovernable temper when aroused, and was also noted as being an honorable, just man.

"Adjoining the farm lived John Hiram, who had two sons, one named ohn, a weak witted young man, and Reginald, an elder brother, who lived. was said, by his wits in the adjoining city. The younger brother was occasionally employed by my uncle to do odd jobs around the farm, and was at such times a source of unceasing worry to my energetic uncle, owing to his inlolent habits. "Reginald, the ne'er-do-well chap,

'ell in love with Lucy Richley, and of ourse when the old gentleman heard of his wooing, he flew into one of his white heat passions and threw the young man out of his house bodily. Naturally, a man like Reginald Hiram would get even eventually, although no one ever heard him boast of such a re-"The following day my uncle, while passing through the garden, saw John sitting in a fence corner idly cracking nuts with a stone. The irascible gentleman again flew into a rage, and, apon receiving an impudent retort, reached for a hoe lying near by, and in his blind rage struck him repeatedly with the iron blade. The man staggerliram. No one had seen him since the | tion of a history of Canada that can be tay of the trouble, and no one had wit- | read with pleasure and profit. That is essed the little scrimmage. My uncle officerly repented his foolish passion and personally exerted strenuous efforts to find the missing man.

"Two weeks had gone and still no our old mother lands is deemed essential" and the missing man.
"Two weeks had gone and still no John. What had become of him? The neighborhood was now thoroughly aroused; the police were notified, and an official investigation followed. My made repeated his story in connection with the disappearance. Then came the grand denouement. Reginald Hiram came out boldly and declared that Benjamin Richley had killed his brother and applied his body in a certain spot which buried his body in a certain spot, which alleged fact he would undertake to prove. To substantiate this, two respectable men, farmers, who lived two miles the men, farmers, who lived two miles from the Richley farm, swore that they had seen my uncle digging in his garden at twelve o'clock on the night following the day of John Hiram's disappearance. They were returning from the city; the moon was shining brightly and from the highroad they plainly saw Mr. Richley digging in his garden. On his head was the wide brimmed hat he always was the wide-brimmed hat he always wore, together with the familiar linen luster known to be inseparable with my uncle. The men swore positively and a grave suspicion was engendered through their statement. "As for my uncle, he merely laughed these positive statements to scorn and gladly encouraged a thorough search of his garden which would prove the falacy of the foul suspicion.

'His suggestion was accepted promptly, and together with a party, Reginald leading the way, my uncle repaired to his garden and the search began, "'Point to the spot where you saw me digging,' said my uncle. 'Right there, sir,' answered both the men at once pointing toward a cluster of bushes about thirty feet

"About five minutes elapsed, when there was a frightened exclamation from the diggers, and a hat was produced, later the badly decomposed remains of a man was brought to the surface. "My uncle gave just one look at the grewsome object then staggered back with a strange, gasping, hopeless cry,

"'My God, men, is it possible?' and was ever afterward as one in a dream. "There were no doubts in the minds face, a fractured skull and lastly a brass ring in the lobe of the right ear, which the deceased had been accustomed to wear, all went to prove that this was the missing man; that he had died from the effect of a blow administered, and that he had afterwards been buried to con-

This, he said, was a strange circumstance, as he invariably hung these articles of apparel on the hall convinced that with a trace of the anger still haunting his brain and an uncomfortable suspicion hanging over him,

"My uncle only lived one year of his sentence and died praying forgiveness for his terrible sin. "Reginald Hiram went to the war and was shot before the battle of Shiloh, accused of being a spy. "One day shortly after the close of the war a man lay dying in a hospitable in St. Louis. The deposition he made created quite a furore at the time. He was the missing John Hiram, and the terrible revenge on my uncle had been con-cocted out of the wily brain of the older brother.

"On the day so memorable to my uncle, and following the chastisement he had received, John Hiram had sought the cover of the woods. There the two brothers met quite by accident. Reginald soon heard the injured brother's story, and like a flash was suggested the opportunity for revenge. Commanding John to keep close under cover of the woods until night fall, when he would again return, the older brother returned to his home.

"At ten o'clock the brothers repaired the remains of a young man who had poisoned himself three days previously. Placing the body in a bag Reginald compelled the frightened John to carry the grewsome load to a spot near Mr. Richley's garden. There the body was dressed in John's clotnes; the face mutilated and the other details attended to carefully, including the hat and coat which was lor owed from the house-farmhouses had few locks and bars in those days. John was given money enough to carry him a distance and his weak mind was duly impressed with the horrible fate awaiting him if he ever returned or made known his whereabouts. So sternly had this fear been impressed on the poor fellow's mind that even in his dying moments he raised himself on his elbow and gazed around fearfully," There was a moment's pause, when the drummer ceased talking, when one of the more curious said:

"But what became of Lucy?" "Oh, yes, I had forgotten Lucy-Lucy's my wife." CHARLES TAMBLYN.

Business Before Pleasure. They were performers in the amateur theatricals. During the progress of the play at one time, while their presence was not needed on the stage, they sat together behind the scenes. She looked beautiful, indeed, in old-fashioned gown and powdered hair, and he, in court costume of a century ago, was the beau ideal of a cavalier. For some time he had been very attentive to her, and although people had frequently remarked upon his devotion he had not come to the point of propos-ing. But as they sat behind the scenes he felt that an opportune moment had "Marie," he said. "you may not have perceived my liking, but I cannot delay. I-I want to ask you to-to be-" Just then the prompter called the girl's name, but she never stirred.

"That's your cue," faltered the interrupted lover. "Yes," she answered, calmly enough laying her hand on his arm, "but never mind the cue. You seemed very earnest just now, and I want you to go on. What were you going to say?"

Wonderful Edison. There is a theory that the man who thinks much over night digs heavy lines in his face, and becomes contracted about the brows and around the corners of his mouth. It is probable that Edison has done as much pondering over things that are not easily ascertainable as any man in America, yet he has a face that is as free from the lines of thought and care as the face of the average office boy Edison's manner carries out the amiable expression of his face. He is a little deaf, but it never annoys him, and he has a little rheumatism which he occasionally derides. In manner he is simple and inquiring. Nearly all of his conversation is interjection points, and he has an astounding disinclination to talk about himself. He is not much of a New Yorker nowadays, though for a time he made it a point to come here at least two or three times a week, and was frequently seen about the hotels and cafes up town. Nowadays he confines

Several years ago, my blood was in bad condition, my system all run down, and my general health very much impaired. My hands were covered with large sores, discharging all the time. I had no strength nor energy and my feelings were miserable in the extreme. At last, I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla and soon noticed a change for the parilla and soon noticed a change for the better. My appetite returned and with it, renewed strength.
