A CONDENSED NOVEL.

Rose-Ethel, what made you behave so mad! Poor Mr. Amesbury looked so miserable when he put us into the carriage that I felt sure you had quarreled. Ethel (indifferently)—We had. I gave him his conge, that's all. He was cross and rude because-well, because of various things-and I said I despised narrow minded men and didn't want to see him again, and that our engagement had better not suit each other. Rose—And what did he say? Ethel-Jim? Oh, I didn't wait to hear what he said. I had had my say, and that be broken off, as it was evident we should was sufficient. Rose-I really wonder that he didn't dismiss you first, you richly deserve it, for you have really behaved disgracefully. Ethel-What nonsense! I don't see why a girl should not amuse herself because she happens to be engaged, and for my part I should not care if Jim were to flirt with all the women in the country! Rose—Perhaps not if he flirted with them all, but what would you have said if he had devoted himself to one for the whole evening and sat out with her as you did with that Mr. Douglas? It was much Jim dislikes the man. Ethel-Pure prejudice, my dear, and I hate prejudice; it's so commonplace! ] like men to be broad in their views, and able to see the good points in other men. Rose-If they possess them. Well, 1 think Mr. Amesbury was right to be angry. I would not care one little bit for a man who did not assert himself-I couldn't respect him! Ethel-My dear, you are certainly the kindest girl in the world, and the very cleverest. You are always trying to do your friends good turns, but you won't do any good here. I have quite made up my mind-Mr. Amesbury and I are apart forever, and not even you are clever enough to bring us together. Rose (aside)-I am not so sure of that

Ethel-What are you saying, my dear? Rose-I was saying nothing-but I was Ethel—And what were you thinking? Rose-Nothing. Oh, nothing-you love Mr. Amesbury still, Ethel, don't you? Ethel-Certainly not. A man who can be rude, cross, unjust, overbearing and who dares to lecture me! Rose-Had he time to be all that? How clever of him! Ethel-You little know men! Rose-Perhaps not, but I think I know Ethel-You little know me, if you think am going to make it up. Rose-What, never at all? You are quite, quite sure? Ethel-Never! Rose-Oh, Ethel! (taking her hands) ! am so glad, so very glad! Ethel-You are glad now. You odd PRICES.

Rose-Don't laugh; it so serious to me. Oh, if I could only have known a long time ago-how lightly your love lay on you-I should have-well, I should have been so different in some things-in one Ethel (puzzled)-I don't a bit know what you mean.

Rose-No, how should you? And you mustn't ever try to guess. But—do you think any woman is justified in sacrificing her own happiness—perhaps only the dream of her own happiness—for the sake of another person? Ethel-No, I don't, and that is why I'm so determined not to sacrifice mine to Mr.

Amesbury. Rose-Oh, Ethel, dearest, kiss me and forgive me. You have made me so happy. Ethel-Have I? I don't see how, but I'm very glad, all the same. Rose-Listen. You are quite sure you don't love Mr. Amesbury one little bit? Ethel-Not one fraction of a little bit.

Rose-How differently you used to talk Ethel-Yes, indeed, once-I had not found him out then! Rose-And really he is very nice-so good looking, so delightful in every way, so clever—such very good form—

Ethel—And such a temper? Rose-Nonsense! I won't have him abused. No really nice man ever had a good temper! You shan't abuse my friend! Ethel-Your friend! Rose-Yes. Did you not know we were ever so long in the country together last August? (Excitedly). He is not your friend now! He is nothing to you! He is my friend, and you shan't abuse him! Ethel (with calm deliberation)-Do you mean to tell me, Rose, that you, my own friend, whom I trusted, have-have played me false? You dare to tell me to my face you are glad he and I are parted, and that you-whom I once thought so loyal -that you love Mr. Amesbury? You flirt with him habitually, no doubt, when my back is turned! Rose (half sobbing)-I confess nothing.

Ethel. Ethel (bitterly)—Ah! I see it all now yes, you danced twice with him yester-Rose-I did-while you danced four times with Mr. Douglas.

Ethel—It is no excuse! Rose-Fortunately, you don't care for Ethel (stamping her foot)-You shan't call him Jim, and I do care for him-you Provisions, know I do. I can't bear it-I-I-think your conduct-why, what are you laugh-

Rose-At you, I'm afraid.

Ethel (after a pause)-Do you really mean-yes, I see. Well, you can act, Rose. But you were ever so long in the country with him! You said so. Rose-Only two days, but it seemed 'ever so long," for he talked of nothing Ethel (after a sudden pause, laughing suddenly)-Well, now, Rose, I dare say you think yourself very clever, but what would you say if I told that I had seen through you all the time? Rose-I should not believe you, dear!-San Francisco Argonaut.

Teaseed Oil. It appears that some of the Ceylon tea planters are making an organized attempt to obtain a sale for their tea seed in the London market. A parcel of seven bags of that article was offered at the drug sales recently, but no one seemed to know what to do with it, and although the broker de clared his belief that the drug was "a favorite medicine in China" the audience remained unmoved. Nevertheless the tea seed might have been worth purchasing for the sake of the bland oil which it contains, to the extent of about 35 per cent by weight, and which resembles olive oil in color and somewhat in taste. The seeds are about the size of a cherry stone,

A little 80 ton schooner ashore, almost in the identical spot off which one of the large lake steamers had grounded one year before. Up in a shady spot on the shore, ust above the little schooner, was the wreck of a small shanty, likewise an evidence of the severity of the gale, it having come down upon the heads of its inmates during the same night.

These two-Ned Fairly and Fred Canfield-were camping in the open air since the disaster, and sleeping under the propped up roof, the interest in a gang of men working on the beached schooner being too strong for them to find time to patch up the shanty. A tug had parted a 21/2 inch hawser trying to draw the Plow Boy off. Captain Jackson, a short, sandy bearded man, with a very red face, was shouting orders and encouragement all day long. She was dug under and long beams used in attempts to pry her up and off, in the manner of the Mississippi steamboat men. On the fifth day of the little craft's stay on the shore, she was deserted by the at the noon hour; asked for their pay, and when it was not forthcoming threw up the

At first Captain Jackson went and sat on the cabin house of his little vessel in apparent indecision. Toward night Fred saw him picking his way up the sand bank toward the ruins of the shanty. He had come to ask them if they would oddly last night? I thought you were to Buffalo to try to raise the funds; he could not offer them provisions, for the last of the little vessel's stores had gone to feed the hands who had deserted her. But the boys were only too delighted to exchange the tumbledown shanty for the snug cabin of the little Plow Boy, and > and other canned edibles of their store aboard cheerily. The next night the western sky looked threatening. This was late in September, and fall gales might be expected at any time. Ned took a long look about before he drew the cabin slide.

they began shifting the hardtack, soups

By midnight the storm had broken, and the pounding, gushing surf made shouting the only mode of conversation practicable. The wind whistled through the rigging of the little vessel in long wails. Barrels and barrels of water were being hurled upon the top of the cabin and her decks-she could even be felt to sway at the blows of some of the heavier seas.

"Let's take a look out," Fred proposed. To have opened any of the cabin winlows would have deluged the little apartment. The chums crawled down through the door into the hold and thence to the too bad of you, because you know how forward deck by way of the forecastle. Climbing upon the bulwarks and clinging to the forestay, a stirring sight lay before and about them. The Plow Boy was as completely surrounded by water as though she were afloat, the seas breaking far up on the shore and all about her It would have been a hazardous undertaking to have attempted to have gone ashore. "Fred!" halloed Ned in his companion's ear suddenly, "this is as big a gale as she came ashore in, and the water's higher, because it's blowing down the lake. I've been thinking—are you in for a big trip?" "You don't mean we can do anything?" shouted Fred back "We might get her off and riding to the anchor if we could get the cable forward. The way it is made fast just now would

Wet to the skin--more nearly drownedthey managed to reach the wheel, when, working knee deep in swirling water most of the time, they were able to cast off the heavy cable from the sheet bits at last. Fortunately the ship's end of the long cable was still at her bow, so that they only had to cast the part they loosened overboard, or they might have been drawn over the side in the attempt to carry it for-

Clinging to the bulwarks like parrots, they worked their way forward again, manned the windlass and took in the slack of the big line as much as they were able. Nor were they any too soon in doing so. "Boom!" a great sea struck the little vessel and the boys felt her rise from the sand. The rushing power of water tried to sweep her down the beach and in, but the cable's resistance could be distinctly felt. If the long line held, the boys knew it would draw the little craft off with every sea that tried to wash her farther in and down the dark shore. With a thrill that set both boys shouting they soon folt the little Plow Boy rising, falling and pitching on the inrushing waves as she swung loose from the shore-the little schooner was off! Then followed a night of heaving and rolling and backaching work at the pumps -for the vessel leaked quite a little-that Ned and Fred say they will never forget. They did not grow seasick, because there was no time to think of it. But they have since declared that they would not have missed the experience for worlds. The storm eased up in the morning, when the lighthouse skiff brought old Captain Jackson out to them; nor was there ever a very much more pleased man than Lured to His Fate. They sat in the parlor, gazing at the natural gas flames as they chased each other over the asbestus surface. The two were Miss Bellefield and Mr. Van Braam, and the young man was in love with the young woman. He was doubtful of her feelings toward him, however, for she was not a girl to display her love, if she had any, until it was sought. The young man had not spoken. He dreaded the ordeal. He was fearful of the result. The conversation turned upon marriage, and in the course of the discussion Miss Bellefield said: "In Burmah the women propose to the

"How I wish we were in Burmah." the young man replied, with a slight stress on the plural pronoun. "It wouldn't do you any good if we were," replied the girl, and Mr. Van Braam did not linger much longer that evening .- New York Recorder.
