SEED POTATOES

Pertinent Advice About Selecting and Cutting for Seed. The Ohio Farmer for April devotes considerable attention to the question of seed | ments and in that way win the name of potatoes, and a large number of its readers | being social, but there are many ways we indulged in a correspondence symposium | can win the good will of our fellowmen on the subject. George E. Scott, one of hem, says: Many correspondents in disenssing the propriety of cutting or not cut-ing potatoes for seed do not make suffiient allowance for different soils and ocalities when adhering to their pet theoies. This they undoubtedly should do naturally or artificially, does not demand as large a quantity of seed to make the pos- debit and credit system. Mr. So-and-So sibility of a good crop a certainty. On he other hand land not nearly so rich, inlined to a stiff clay and underlaid with an mpervious hard pan, demands more seed per acre and wants that seed in larger bulk to the single piece so that the seed seed does not increase yield, but rather larger but fewer tubers, causing the plant to ripen and mature much earlier than the same variety would do if cut smaller to one and two eyes. No grower now thinks of planting whole or large seed except for extra early use, and then only in a small Just where the part of wisdom comes in for me to plant 30 bu. of whole seed per acre has never yet made sufficiently forcible impression to induce me to do so only in a small way by way of experiment, which resulted in favor of pieces ment, which resulted in layor of pieces cut to weigh never more than 1 lb.

Selecting seed for planting requires good judgment, using nothing but smooth, shapely tubers typical of the class and variety to which they belong. An irregular, unshapely tuber should be absolutely discarded if recombling the illustration discarded if resembling the illustration,

Seed should not be too large, neither too small, but "average to fair" in sizenot falling much below 1 lb. nor much above 1 lb. in weight, cut always toward the stem for the excellent reason that the feed vein running from the stem to the seed end supplies the eyes with lateral veins running at an angle as indicated in illu-If a concave knife be used it should be very slim, or any other knife used should be of like character so that the grain of the seed piece will not be broken by wedginy in passing the blade through while cutting. I should be a little doubtful about using a cutting machine that cuts directly at right angles with the central feed vein, thus destroying the functional point of the central and lateral vein. This I should consider a very grave mistake and one that should undoubtedly be

The seed end is never taken into further consideration than to see that the piece contains at least one eye of fair size which goes into the pile with the rest. Some varieties are prone to false eyes which should be carefully watched or hills will be miss-thermometer is necessary, and for the amount of milk usually found a new tin wash boiler will do in which to make the curd. If two milkings are put into one cheese, a boiler for night's milk and one for the morning's milk will suffice. The milk should be mixed in the morning and slowly raised to 80° F., the rennet and the coloring must be added, well stirred in and the curd allowed to form, which it should do in about forty minutes.

The coloring may be used or not, as one chooses. It may be bought at the drug store, and while it improves the color of the cheese, it is harmless. All factory cheese as we see it is colored. The rennet may be of two kinds. The old way was to use the salted rennet and soak it in water. A better way, when one makes a small quantity of cheese or makes cheese irregularly, is to buy the rennet tablets made by Hansen. Full directions for using them are found with each package.

When the curd is firm it must be cut into small cubes with a long-bladed knife and allowed to stand about an hour. It is then gently heated to a temperature between 96° and 100° F., never higher, and allowed to hold this temperature about ten or fifteen minutes. The old rule for heating was to let the curd heat for one and a half hours and to hold this temper-ature until a bit of the curd, when chewed, "squeaked in the teeth."

The whey is now drawn off and the curd laring in a cloth to drain. It is minced fine, salted with from two to two and a half pounds salt to each hundred pounds of eard-the proportion for small cheeses being exactly the same. It may be pressed twenty-four hours, and the hoop, with its "follower," must be strong, while the press may be any home-made press which will bring the desired weight on the

When pressed the cheese may be taken out of the cloth in which it was put into the hoop and be bandaged neatly with cheese-cloth. It should stand in a room never higher in temperature than 70°, and should be turned every day until it is cured. Many cheese makers like to grease the outside of the cheese with a little fresh butter every time it is turned. It must be kept away from the flies, and it should cure in from ten days to a month.

How often do we see a poor ignoramus suddenly acquire control of a handsome sum of money, and see how readily he is taken up and petted and pampered when before he was beneath the notice of Mr. Money Bags. There can be no set rule for our social improvement better than the golden rule Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

A Hoisting Singletree. The illustration is of a hoisting singletree which has been recently patented in the United States and which has been successfully used on hay derricks and where hay is put into the barn by means of a large fork. In the figure on the right the singletree and accompanying apparatus are shown in position. The traces are passed through the keepers, and along the back of the singletree to hooks in the centre. The singletree being bent, it can be fitted close to the horse like breeching without having to shorten the traces. It is held up by a strap, the upper end of which is snapped into the ring at the back, which connects the straps that support the traces. By means of this arrangement the singletree is kept unhooked or get under the horse's feet in backing or turning. The figure on the left shows a new spreader attachment by means of which two singletrees can be hitched together when it is desirable to use two horses. This apparatus gives great satisfaction, says the Orange Judd Farmer, especialty when used for hitching four or six-horse teams. It does not strike the animals' heels and causes no weight upon the necks of the team behind. These singletrees are very useful in doing all kinds of hoisting and are also especially adapted to ice plows.

Our readers have no doubt had their attention attracted to the new forage plant known by the above heading and by the common name of the flat pea, says the Mirror and Farmer. It has been very highly praised by the Michigan experiment station. This fact will no doubt be taken advantage of by the dealers to put it on the market at the high rates prevailing. It came to this country highly recommended by Wagner, an authority highly respected and adequate to give it a respectable boom. It is adapted to poor and sandy, dry soils.
