LA FLECHE FOWLS.

A Critical Estimate of the Value of These French Fowls. A singular name for a singular fowl! Whether it means, as it has been usually resemblance of its comb to an arrowhead, is a matter of small consequence. The former idea, referring the fowl to the class of poultry bred with special reference to their use upon the table, ago of learning of a remnant of the descendants of this early importation, and

TRIO OF HIGH BRED LA FLECHE FOWLS ceedingly dark night to see them. After presenting proper credentials, and satisfying the owner that I had a legitimate purpose in view and was not a hen thief, he condescended to exhibit the fowls. They were very small, not much larger than Black Hamburgs, though even then they showed the distinctive shape of the breed. Their small size led me to wonder how they ever came to be regarded as among the leading table breeds, and this wonder did not disappear until January, 1889, I saw at the Buffalo, N. Y., Exhibition the fowls, recently imported by McPren Scotten, of Detroit, Mich. The McPren Scotten, of Detroit, Mich. The sight of these fowls explained the mystery, for they were large, heavy, full-meated specimens, and clearly displayed the table properties which they were said to possess. Since that time, at our leading poultry exhibitions, some fine specimens of the breed have regularly appeared, whether they, too, are recent importations, or descendants from the Scotten birds I am unable to say. I have suspected the latter, as Mr. Scotten, who is a game fancier, early disposed of his La Fleche; though it is by no means improbable that other and more recent importations have been more recent importations have been made in the past three years. I have an indistinct recollection that some have been made by a gentleman in New

SHOP,

I Steamboat others. Behind the comb there is often a small tuft of feathers, and an incipient or rudimentary crest. This ought not to be, for exhibition purposes, but nevertheless often is. The French breeders have not told us exactly how the fowl was produced, but its appearance indicates some, at least, of the elements of its composition. The tall, stately carriage and the plumage of black point to Black Spanish as one of its parents, and the fact that it was once known as and the fact that it was once known as the Black Spanish of France leaves little doubt of the fact. The rudimentary crest shows that some crested breed was used in its production. For a long time it was supposed that this breed was Polish, but it is difficult to reconcile this supposition with the size of La Fleche. Latterly, and it seems with a very good show of reason, the Crevecœur has been suggested as the crested breed that was used. This fowl would give the black plumage and the desired size, and would indeed the interest of the state of the sta indeed fit into the appearance of the breed under discussion. A cross of Spanish and Crevecœur would produce a fowl quite closely resembling La Fleche in size, color, shape, and other characteristics. Its table qualities have already been alluded to. The body and breest are plump, the flesh is delicate and breast are plump, the flesh is delicate and the skin white. The color of skin and shanks handicap the breed in most American markets, as much as would a yellow skin and yellow shanks in the markets of France. I recently read an advertisement of a French poultry breeder who offered a number of varieties for sale and concluded his advertisement in words to this effect, "All these breeds are especially suitable for the table as they have dark shanks and a white skin." So do trifles make a tivation. fashion, even in the poultry markets of the world. As a layer the breed may be regarded excellent for summer months, but not a safe dependence for winter. The eggs are large, and the shells are white in color. It has been generally supposed that the La Fleche is a delicate breed. The inbred specimens were un-questionably thus affected, but I am inquestionably thus affected, but I am informed by personal acquaintances, who have hept the more recent importations, that they found the fowls quite hardy, ranking about on a level with our American breeds. Still the reputation for a delicacy, derived from the degenerate descendants of the earlier importations, clings to the breed, and perhaps deters some from keeping it who would otherwise be inclined to do so.

While acknowledging the many ex-

While acknowledging the many ex-cellent qualities of this fowl, and while further stating that I believe that it can be bred to a handsome profit whether for practical or fancy purposes, yet one would not be doing his full duty to the readers of this publication if he failed it. readers of this publication if he failed to state some reasons why it does not seem that it would attain so great popularity as some breeds enjoy. The black plumage, though very handsome to look at on the fowl, leaves black pin feathers upon the dressed poultry which are less pleasant to the sight. The white skin does not make the fowl look as fat as reallow skin would; and Americans are yellow skin would; and Americans are prejudiced against the latter. Its dark shanks, while entirely suitable to a white skinned fowl, are not regarded with favor by American purchasers.

The Horse's Shoes.

Probably there is no one line of business in which so much bungling work is done as shoeing horses, especially for winter traveling, when frozen roads and ice abound. An hour spent in a blacksmith shop, where a dozen or more horses are operated upon, reveals a great deal of ignorance and quackery. Invariably the toe and the heel calks are made high, and generally too broad. They are made thus so they would wear longer; when the fact is, the opposite is the case. It should be borne in mind that, as a rule, the shorter, sharper and smaller the calks are, so interpreted, The Flesh, or whether it long as they answer their purpose, the means The Arrow, from the supposed more effectual they will be, the longer they will last and the easier they will be for the horse. On ice, with high calks, no other part of the shoe touches; and it gives the animal a partial awkwardness as if walking upon stilts, while seems certainly more natural, for La | small sharp calks enter their length into Fleche is a choice table breed of fowls | the ice, and the horse stands squarely on in France and other European countries. his shoes, Most of the first wear of shoes A good many years ago Mr. Philander Williams, of Taunton, Mass., imported the toe; but with small calks, a share of some specimens of this breed, but they passed out of his hands and practi- hence sharp, small calks will last longer cally ran out. I remember some years | than large ones. High calks, while they confer no firmer foothold-and on very hard roads not so firm-are a potent means of inflicting injury on both the foot itself and the limb also, says Dr. Wilson in Practical Farmer. It is only from that portion of the hold which enters the ground surface that the horse derives any benefit in foothold; and it must be apparent to the most ordinary observer, that long calks which do not penetrate the hard ground are so many him to wring his feet, rack his limbs and inflict untold tortures upon himself. When to Breed Animals.

> on the ninth day after foaling. This may be well if the mare is strong and healthy, and if there appears sufficient reason for it. Young females that have been put to breeding too young, before their physical powers have become developed should have rest. Such should pass over one, two or three periods of heat. Bitches, whose offspring it is desirable to procure, cannot be thus sirable to procure, cannot be thus treated. With small animals it is a matter of less consequence, though the the periods of breeding should be regulated by the seasons. Pigs and lambs coming in winter should have proper provision made for the protection and preservation of their young. Grasseating animals should come in when such food must be depended upon after the due period of lactation of the mothers cease from economy or from the habits of nature. As a rule, the progeny of domestic animals would do better during their entire lives, could they receive natural nourishment for periods for longer than it is the general custom to permit. Cows that are drained to the last drop of milk possible cannot properly nourish a feetus at the same time, unless the system has some rest between the periods of gestation. Many animals are annually sacrificed from the unyield-ing burdens of maternity. The popular mind is satisfied because death is attributed to tuberculosis, or other ailments. But debilitated animals are in a state that renders them especially liable to take on disease, because they have not the strength to resist the attack .- A. T. Sibley.

Training Colts. A colt's education should begin the first week of its life. Then its disposition is formed better than at any other time. It is most easily impressed, and has not acquired a tendency to resist. Whatever is taught then, the colt falls direct into, and it becomes, in a manner, instinctive. The young animal has nothing to unlearn afterwards, if this edutaught anything the owner wishes before this age, and may earn its living at light work before it is two years old. A regular course of gentle and kind training is indispensible. The first lesson is the use of the halter and the confinement by it. If it is tied up in a small stall near the dam, and let loose twice during the day, and all night, and taught to be lead, the greater part of its education has been accomplished For the whole of this consists in subservience to its owner's will, which is the object and result of education. When this has been done, everything after comes as a matter of course, if no mistakes are made. The animal should never be frightened, or whipped. There is no use for a whip, at any time, with a well trained work horse. Indeed it is injurious with many naturally highspirited horses. In the use of a saddle or harness, a perfect fit is indispensable, as the principal idea running all through the training is that nothing shall be disagreeable or painful to the animal Thus by gradual teaching, its duty and business are learned, and it understands what is required of it. It is naturally willing to obey, and is pleased to work when it has never been hurt by it. But when its education is considered com-plete, it should not be suspended, for, like that of a man, it goes on continually, some new experience coming up at times that calls for the good management of the horse's owner. An Ever Present Object Lesson. Good stock is an educator. It presents an ever present object lesson of the value of breeding, selection and cul-
