CALLER IN.
"Where are you going with that hat on?" queried my wife in a tone of extreme solicitude.

"I don't see that there hat," called off. Here it is away in October, and you are still going around as if in fear of a sunstroke."

"That has nothing to do with it. It's custom that dictates such matters. People already say that you have very little sense in the establishment of opinions and are as odd as three men have a right to be. If they see you with that hat, they will certainly think you are a theosophist."

"I burn the article at once. What hat shall I wear?"
"Take this of Jim's. It's his latest."

"I'm in my brother-in-law. There seems to be an even heat between him and the fashion plate as to which shall show the newest style the sooner."

"Yes," responded my wife, with an air of pride. "Now you look like somebody." The ambition of many people to present the appearance of being "somebody" with out the labor of actually acquiring the right to be so formed the subject of my philosophical meditations on my way to the office.

"He resided in a pleasant flat. Only Mrs. Verrin was at home, and I hung up my borrowed chapeau in the hall and went into the parlor to await her appearance. She was a young lady, not long married, and I thought appeared in a less cheerful mood than circumstances should warrant, so after delivering my message I inquired as to the cause of her apparent dejection. It came out presently that she and her husband had had a little tiff, and the world was now wrapped in a cloud of purple gloom.

"Once the mood of confidence was yielded to she was anxious to have some one advise her."
"It was like this," she said. "Charlie said—now, I said, we didn't seem to have as much money to spend as formerly. And he said that on account of the hard times he was obliged to call in a good many of our foolish expenditures—just as though I had been extravagant and advised what I had spent money for foolishly. And he said he didn't know, only money was hard to get and did not seem to go far, and he worked like a slave and all that. And I said that he ought to have known it would cost something if he got married. And he ought to have thought of it. And then he said, 'All a woman cares for is money' and away he went in a rage, and I had no time to explain anything."

"She was in tears by this time, and as I was expected to make some consolatory remarks I uttered the usual commonplace about it being difficult for two persons to see things from the same point of view, but that these little disagreements did not amount to anything with people of sense, and that everything would come right, and—"

"All you have to do is to be as nice as you can be when he comes home, and the lady will be bridged and peace restored." I was engaged in my thought of the wife's unhappiness that she entirely escaped my mind that I had hung up Jim's derby in the hall. A straw hat took my eye. I put it on and passed on my way to the city. Unfortunately, while crossing the bridge, there came a gust of wind, and the hat and I parted company. The hat went into the gutter, giving up the ghost, and the name of Charles Verrin's conspicuous only printed inside. Then I recalled the exchange I had made. I walked a block hither and, and at the shop of a dealer in such articles purchased a new tie.

"The rest of the day was uneventful. Business kept me in town till evening. When I returned home, my wife was just going forth."
"What do you think?" she cried. "Poor Charles Verrin has been drowned! They found his hat in the river, and a person went up to the house and told Alice about it."

"What manner of fool was that?" I inquired.
"She is distracted. They are searching for his body. They had a quarrel this morning, and he went away in a pet and hasn't returned since. Oh, you think he has drowned himself because of it or because of hard times?"

"Nonsense! I wear his hat by mistake. Oh, Gus, did you really do it?"
"Don't you see this one I've just bought?"
But Polly had not so much as one glance to spare.

"Come," she cried, "let us go and tell poor Alice that it's only her husband's hat that has been 'killed' in it."
It is said that a body passing through the air must move with a velocity of 30 feet a second to produce high C. I don't know what note a note would be in falling—they seem seldom to fall in cities, where the fact could be observed, but choose desolate regions to embed themselves in the soil—but there was in my case a rush of wind fully two tones above high C, and the flutter of feminine drapery was like the rush of mighty waters.

"What's gone for the doctor," murmured the policeman.
"Five minutes to catch the last train," suggested the expressman. Suddenly there was a shock and a collision.
"Just coming round to see you," exclaimed one of a breathless couple, rising from the ground a moment after. "Somebody stole my hat, and it's never!"
"Now, don't!" rebuked his wife. "It's all right. We thought we'd come and let you know that Charlie wasn't killed, and we've made up our quarrel, and we're re-arranging to have another as long as we live!"

Then we all hummed in unison the words of the refrain of the woman's college song:
"Tis very hard to be a saint,
But all should thus endeavor."

Built on Wooden Piles.
Among the 65,000,000 in the United States there are probably not 500 outside of the locality who are aware that at the mouth of the Mississippi there is a little village built upon wooden piles standing far out in the water. This village, which is called Balize, is reached from the main land by a causeway, and its inhabitants have to climb a kind of pole ladder to get to the doorways of their homes. This is probably the only village in the United States in which "pile dwellings" occur, but all along the Venezuelan coast and at the mouths of the Orinoco and the Amazon, similar villages are frequently met with, many of them inhabited by the Indian fishing tribes of the Amazon estuary.—Exchange.

SAVED BY A JUROR.
So he is dead!
I looked again at the newspaper which I held in my hand and read:
Jethro—Died, near Mobile, March 18, 1893, Emanuel Jethro, aged 57 years.
He is dead after all these years, and at last I am free to reveal a terrible secret of a jury room which has been a burden to myself and 10 other men unless they, like Jethro, have passed over the river.

In August, 1875, there was a murder trial in Mobile, which perhaps the older citizens of that city still remember. I was the third juror chosen. Of jurors No. 1 and 2 I remember, but little, except that they were both elderly men and well to do citizens of the county.
Jurors No. 4, 5 and 6 were merchants of the city, at least two were merchants and one a clerk.

After Juror No. 6 was told to pass into the jury box the court clerk called the name of "Emanuel Jethro." I believe every one in the courtroom was struck with the man's appearance.

He walked briskly and in a peculiarly nervous manner which could not fail to attract attention. He answered the solicitor's questions eagerly. In fact, one time his answer came before the question was concluded.

The solicitor said: "Prisoner, look on the juror, Juror, look on the prisoner," and he probably expected the defense to strike, but the defense did not.

Juror No. 7 was told to take his seat in the box. His residence was given in the jury list as Bayou La Batre, and he evidently came from a very secluded place on the coast.

The rest of that day was taken up in securing the other five jurors.
The next morning the examination of witnesses began. The evidence was short, and not conclusive.

Karl Beiderman, a German youth employed on a truck garden near the city, was charged with murdering his employer by opening his head with an axe.
He and the gardener and lived alone. One morning the boy came into the city, and while drinking freely had shown a jury list as Bayou La Batre, and he evidently came from a very secluded place on the coast.

The German youth was arrested, with some of the money still in his possession. There was proof that the boy and the gardener had been found quarreling about an increase in wages, which the boy had asked for and did not get.

To offset this strong array of circumstantial evidence, there was nothing but the prisoner's statement, very laudably told by an interpreter. He denied knowing anything of the killing and said the money he had was given him by a man the night before as a bribe to leave his employer, that he knew nothing of the killing or who did it.

When we reached the jury room, there seemed but two things to do—elect a foreman and bring in a verdict of guilty.
The first we did with little trouble.

Then we began to argue the case as a matter of form. I contended the vote, and it stood: For guilty, 11; for acquittal, 1.
"Who is the twelfth gentleman who does not know the way to the seat?" one of the jurors asked sarcastically.

"I am," came the reply, calmly spoken by juror No. 7—Emanuel Jethro.
Then we began to argue the case with him. He looked out the window most of the time and made no reply to any of our telling arguments. Finally he was asked if he had any reason to advance for voting as he did.

"None at all," he replied quietly, "except that I don't wish to see an innocent man hanged."
There were some more convincing arguments by the 11, and we took another vote: For murder, 11; for acquittal, 1.

And that was the way the vote stood next morning after breakfast.
We grew desperate. Finally the whole manner of Jethro changed, and he exclaimed excitedly:

"If each of you will take a solemn oath before God that made you up to me, to reveal what I tell you until I am dead, I will give you the reason why I do not agree to a verdict of guilty."
After some consultation and glances at the clock, which showed that the hour for receiving the verdict was at hand, we, one at a time, took the oath.

In low, half-whispered tones the juror told his secret.
Fifteen minutes later we went into the courtroom with a verdict of "not guilty."
I remember distinctly the consternation on the judge's face and the look of disgust which crossed the face of the juror who had voted guilty.

The newspapers criticised us severely and went so far as to write editorials on account of a failure of the courts to adequately punish the juror who had voted guilty against the country, are hereby requested to render aid in the purchase of a copy of the book, "The Juror's Oath," a prompt compliance with this notice is required.

Hotel New Netherland.
FIFTH AVENUE, CENTRAL PARK AND 59th ST. NEW YORK.

The most elegant, the safest, the strongest and most complete hotel palaces of the world. On the European plan, with a grand restaurant, cafe and private saloons.
Artificial light and cold storage used exclusively.
Every parlor, bed-room, bath room and clothes closet scientifically ventilated, rendered it absolutely impossible for impure air to accumulate, thus making all rooms perfectly healthy, even in the hottest weather, a feature unknown in other hotel buildings.
All plumbing of the most modern description; every pipe or outlet being ventilated from the roof.
All Grocers water, for drinking cooking and even being prepared and served by a stock exchange system, which, unlike any other, removes all organic matter from the water which is held in suspension and physical solution, not at the same time (through) chlorination and deodorizes the water during purification, thereby rendering it a product equal to the finest chemically distilled water, pure and yet sparkling, without the aid of chemicals in any form whatever.
All rooms of every description, even to clothes closets, are lighted by electricity, thus avoiding the vital air caused by gas and the danger of its being in contact with gas.
The house is more thoroughly fire-proof than any other building ever constructed, no wood being used except for cabinet work.
Steam boilers outside of the building.
Refrigerators, Ice-machines, and operations furnished. Telephone in every room. Long distance telephones in the office. Individual safes for each guest in office.
Breakfast from the Sixth Avenue Elevated Railroad Station, 11th Avenue stage and Fifty-Ninth Street Cross-town cars pass the door.
Theater, billiard and telegraph offices. Bowling alleys and billiards.
The price of rooms will range from $1.50 per day upwards.

Hotel Normandie.
BROADWAY AND THIRTY-EIGHTH STREET, NEW YORK.

Home strictly first class in all appointments, and a most central and delightful location, easy of access to places of amusement and business, and one block from the Metropolitan Opera House, the Casino, the new Broadway Theatre and the new Electric Building.
The main feature of the Hotel is that it is absolutely fire-proof. The floor and roof beams are all of iron, and the filling between the beams and several floors, and at the roof is fire-proof brick arch work laid in concrete.
The sanitary arrangements have been made a special feature by competent sanitary engineers.
The hotel is fitted with the most complete system of electric appliances ever devised to insure the safety of guests in any similar case.
Every room is connected by direct speaking tubes with the office, and guests will be able to summon their waiters, or give orders to the office, without having to call on bell-boys, or when a guest desires to leave his room, by notifying the office, the room can be connected with a system of alarms, so that no one can enter it by the door, the window or balcony, without the fact being announced in the office.
Fire alarm signal to every room and to the Metropolitan Fire Department.
The hotel contains 200 rooms, on suite and single, all heated by steam, and equipped on the European plan, with a restaurant, cafe and saloons of peculiar excellence.
Special arrangements made to facilitate business. Rooms ranging from $1.00 per day and upwards.

Normandie-by-the-Sea.
NORMANDE (NEAR SEABRIGHT) NEW JERSEY.

On the American plan. This magnificent hotel is double fronted, facing the Atlantic ocean on the east and the Shrewsbury river on the west. Open from June to October. The hotel is new and fire-proof. It is situated on a high bluff,
