Frank Ashton, standing before her in the bright reflection of the fire, was not what built, with careless brown masses of hair, ed vows. and gray blue eyes-this was his photograph; yet Fanny Orme had rejected all the village exquisites to nestle at last in the brave, honest heart of Frank Ashton. Just at present, however, to judge from appearances, the course of true love was not running in its smoothest channel. Frank looked grave, and Fanny's rose red lips were curved in a very gentle pout. "Now, Fanny, don't be cross!" said the young soldier, and he took her hand caressingly. It was drawn away, however, with

Fanny Orme had paused to ask the question of Malvina Grigg, the village bulletin and gossip general, who knew most things as soon as they had happened, and some things a little sooner. "News? Boston Globe. Too Much. Two Detroit women met the other morn ing on the street, and with a common impulse they began to talk about hired help. "Have you got a girl yet?" asked one. "I've had about a dozen in the last month. and they are no good. The cap sheaf was laid on, though, yesterday."

"How was that?" came the eagerly curious interruption. "Well, a very stylish girl of about 30 called at noon to see about a place. I liked her looks, though she was dressed better than I was, but I thought as she was so particular about her clothes she'd be nice every other way. Of course she was haughty and proud, but lots of untidy ones were that way, so I overlooked that, too, and I had practically engaged her when what do you think she wanted?" "Six nights off and two afternoons for matinees?" suggested the other one.
"No, not that. Would you believe it? She wanted an extra room for her maid to occupy. Now what do you think of that?" and the other one dropped her power of thinking.—Detroit Free Press.

NUMBER 16.

"One day I was vaccinating a tribe of Crees, when a woman approached with a couple of children. She had a rich, melodious voice, with a Scotch accent. When she spoke I stopped for a moment and told her to step into the next tent and I would attend to her in a few moments. I saw she was not a squaw, and thought she was the wife of a Hudson's Bay Company employe who wanted to get vaccinated at the expense of the government. "While I was speaking, the clerk shouted out: 'No. 16,' and the woman said in a low voice: 'I am No. 16.' She bared her arm, and both she and the children were attended to. "The face and voice of that woman Druggists, at 50c. and $1.00. haunted me the rest of the day while I kept scratching the arms of braves, squaws and pappooses. "'At last the day's work was over and set about to satisfy my curiosity as to the history of No. 16. A few inquiries enabled me to locate the shack where she put up, and thither I bent my way. "No. 16 related to me how and why she occupied the shack. It was rather a romantic story, but yet one full of sadness from beginning to end.

"'My father,' said No. 16, in a voice full of pathos, 'is a Scotchman, and is factor of Fort Pelley, belonging to the Hudson's Bay company. Before the Northwest territories were taken over, chimney, and there was needed no further he ruled the country for hundreds of miles around. He was a magistrate, Wax candles or chandeliers would have too, and of course administered the law.' "When No. 16 reached a certain age

she was sent to Scotland. "When Scotland was reached she entered a university and remained there until she graduated. These were pleasant days for the young western girl. She became acquainted with an intelligent young Scotchman, and the attachment became so strong on both sides that before she left the land of heather women call handsome. Dark and strongly | for the wilds of Canada they had plight-

"One of the company's ships bore her away from her pleasant associations in Scotland to the higher latitudes of Davis straits and the Hudson's bay, where the iceberg is familiar in August, there again to rough it over fords and stretches of swamps, up vast water courses, and along bewildering trails, in company with the trappers and porters of the company for months, until Fort Pelley was again reached. "The journey was made in safety. Of course it was understood that her tempt it. Fanny, love, don't ask me to do "Thus matters stood for a long time It was impossible for her to let the young man in Scotland know how matters were. In the meantime, however, he had determined to reach the Northwest. "He came and made his way to Fort Garry, where he joined a party who were going to Fort Pelley. His reception at Fort Pelley was a cold one. The father would not allow him to see his daughter. He was ordered to leave the country at once. This order was supreme, and had to be obeyed. "He could not reside in the country an hour without the factor's kno wledge. Even if he could, there was no means for a young man like him to gain a livelihood. The forts held all the necessaries of life, and none could be pur-And thus they parted.

> "One morning, after the factor and his retinue had taken their places at the breakfast table, it was noticed that the daughter's chair was vacant. The mother was asked the reason, and she replied that the girl was ill and she was unable to leave her room.

"The father, suspecting that she had heard of his actions toward the young Scotchman, and that she was feigning sickness, determined to show her that he was not to be trifled with. The mother was requested to tell her to come down, and the daughter obeyed the "When she entered the hall it was

She therefore made her way to a tribe of Cree Indians. It did not take her long to make up her mind what to do. It was a terrible sacrifice, but she was de termined to thwart her father's plans, and in order to do this she became the pale faced squaw of a full-blooded Cree. "Although, with her husband, she often encamped near the fort, her father never noticed her afterward.

"The woman's story affected me very much," said the speaker, "and I was glad when my work was over, but the sacrifice No. 16 made has never left my memory."-St. John Globe.
