STOMACH WORMS IN LAMBS.

Symptoms of Their Presence and a Simple Remedy for the Trouble. During last autumn there was great complaint of mortality among lambs, says George W. Franklin in February number of the American Agriculturist, and this was not exceptional, for it is so nearly every year. The lambs are taken from their dams suddenly, and placed apart in some inclosed lot, and in a few days of bleating for their dams they begin to retrograde; parasites increase in numbers as the lamb deteriorates and fails to obtain the nutrition necessary to keep up thrifty growth. If malnutrition sets in, the lambs soon loose their appetite, diarrhea ensues, they become emaciated, their breathing is difficult. and a swelling is noticed about the throat and lower jaw. If not relieved, death results. When lambs have become so affected, some owners apply lotions, liniments and salves to the swellings, and lance them with a sharp knife. Such treatment is erroneous. since the trouble lies deeper. The swelling is an indication of malnutrition, which is induced by the presence worms in the stomachs. We are led to much less to produce a pound of meat, ask why the swelling on the jaws when butter or milk from a pure-bred animal the trouble is in the stomach? Dropsical effusions are general symptons at-tending many forms of disease where imperfect nutrition is present. It is the presence of great numbers of the twisted stomach worm (Strongylus contortus) in the stomach of the lambs, which interferes with the digestive functions. As the lamb is robbed of its proper nutrition, dropsical swellings result as outward indications of the trouble. Long before the swelling occurs in the throat of the lambs, they will show signs of languor, which indicate that they are not well. This is the time when treatment should begin, before the swelling appears under the jaws and diarrhea and loss of appetite have emaciated the lamb. The affected lambs should be separated from the remainder of the flock, and given twice daily a dose of one-half ounce turpentine in one to two ounces of raw linseed oil. This will not only remove the stomach worms, but also any intestinal or lung worms which may be lurking in the system. This species of the strongylus is not found in great numbers in adult sheep, but in lambs its numbers are in direct ratio with the unthrifty condi-The practiced eye of the shepherd can see when the first symptom of irregu-larity comes in the lamb, and he is at once prompted to use proper treatment for preventing any further disturbance in the functions of its system. In the incipiency of any disorder is the time to begin treatment, for a very sick sheep or lamb is difficult to treat with medicine, and one may as well kill it at once. The lung worm (Strongylus filaria) is sometimes troublesome, but this species is indicated by somewhat different symptoms. The lamb coughs a great deal, and a mucus runs from the mouth and dries upon the under lips, though the lamb will always have a good appetite. The disease caused by this parasite is known as the "paper skin," owing to the bloodless condition of the skin. The treatment recommended above will prove beneficial in this disease, and will reach the worms through the blood.

Details in Care of Stock. Have a fixed hour for feeding and watering stock and rigidly observe it. The animal system is a machine which works best when operated by the same rules. Additional food is necessary to restore rormal condition when an unusual length of time has elapsed between meals. The feeder who is on time as faithfully as the hours arrive, saves fully one tenth of the food required where the intervals between feedings are varied. Stock grow discontented in a few minutes after their meal time arrives if not fed, and this restlessness causes a loss of flesh. The first cravings of hunger are greater also than an hour later, as Nature soon endeavors to supply the de-mands of the system from the stored reserve of fat. So a double loss is the result. The reserve is drawn upon, and than food at its regular period. All experience testifies that a desire for a drink when thirsty is more intense than the cravings of hunger. Exercise for animals is as important as regular feed-ing and watering. Lack of it tends toward dyspepsia which wastes both flesh and energy. In some way the breeding stock should always be given exercise. The farmer who practices punctuality in the care of his stock, breeding operations included. will find himself a better man in all the affairs of life, and is much more certain of reaping the full reward for his labors-Orange Judd Farmer.

A Curious But Excellent Test. In bulletin 57 of the New York station the question has been tested whether hens will lay well when kept away from the males, and in an expert experiment where eight pullets were kept separate from a male it was found that they produced eggs at about 30 per cent. less cost than in another pen where roosters were kept. In a second pen where the test was conducted over several months almost a similar proportion of reduction in the cost was noticeable. It was found also that in some pens where cockerels were not kept the birds began to lay from one to three months earlier than where the roosters were kept with the pullets. The feeding was only such as is natural in most poultry yards, as no attempts were made to force the hens to lay. Every one was given enough to eat, and allowed to lay when she felt like it, and the whole surroundings were about the same as those the cockerels in the pen with laying hens unless they are kept for the purpose of breeding. For simple egg production the roosters are unnecessary adjuncts to the pen, for they often worry the hens to such an extent as to stop their laying. Don't Keep Stock Waiting. The first cravings of hunger are greater than an hour later, as nature soon endeavors to supply the demands of the system from the stored reserve of fat. The feeder who is on time as faithfully as the hours arrive saves fully onetenth of the food required where the intervals between feedings are varied.

STOCK HINTS. The Principles Which Underlie All Sucgess in Stock Raising. etc., etc. It is the food that produces growth, and hence the expression "breed is in the trough.' This is true only to a certain extent. There is something in the digestion of the food after it has been consumed, and as the digestive capacity of animals differs, the food may be fed at a loss, because the stock is ials so necessary for their comfort and the production of meat, butter or milk in proportion to that which is expected of the breed selected. When the stock has been graded up, or pure-bred in the conditions of management. Nothing must be relied upon to secure success but feed and care. The Shorthern cow that has been accustomed to rich pastures cannot climb steep hillsides, or seek its food on scanty herbage, nor can it be made to produce a profit by being compelled to pick over straw and consume the extra corn fodder. In order to fatten and increase in weight it must be well provided with The deep-milking Holstein, it is capable of giving good results under certain conditions, cannot give as full quota of milk when she is compelled to produce it from the wornout pasture, as her indigestion is too rapid for such methods of feeding. The Merino sheep, which can range in large flocks, and secure food where some animals could not exist, produces but a small carcass, with a heavy fleece, but the Oxford or Shropshire would starve under the same conditions. That it will pay to feed heavily to animals that are capable of giving good returns from the food has been demonstrated by numerous experiments, and economy in feeding the pure breeds consist in giving them all the food that can be digested and utilized in production. It is not suggested that any animal be fed more than it should have, for that would be a waste, but it pays to feed liberally when the result is a gain by so doing. In fact, the object in using a pure-bred animal is to have it eat as much as possible, those with the best appetites being the more valuable, but the production should be correspondingly as large. The pure breeds are not only better feeders than the natives, but they have been specially bred for capacity to digest and assimilate all they can eat, the record of the best aniof countless thousands of thread like | mal showing that the cost of food is than from any other, thus securing a larger profit to the farmer. A Cow of Especial Value. A cow that will fatten rapidly after she has passed her usefulness as a milker is of especial value as a dairy animal. This is not the main point, but it is one of the points to be looked to when buying dairy stock. Now if it is a fact that the capacity to eat and digest which a good dairy cow must have is not always turned to the production of flesh and fat when she stops giving milk, how is a man to know, before he tries it, whether any particular cow will fatten or not? We think it may be set down as a rule with but few exceptions that cows that give a good quantity of rich milk will fatten readily on the same food when allowed to go dry. But "when they have passed their period of usefulness" means that they are too far gone to properly chew and digest their food and convert it into milk, and of course could not be expected to make beef readily. In their natural state cows are more inclined to make beef, for that is the method by which the system perfects itself and provides for future emergencies, while giving milk is only a temporary arrangement to feed the young calf; and the development of dairy breeds has been accomplished by over coming and changing this natural propensity, and we see all grades of this development in dairy cows of the present time. Some cows will fatten while giving milk if well fed, and others cannot be fed so well but they will put all they digest into milk. The tendency of the breed is all the indication a heifer can show, and no man should expect a good dairy cow to make flesh after she is too far gone to make milk. Some whose tendencies are more the other way might do so. What It is Equal To. Professor Dana says: "The quantity of liquid manure produced by one cow annually is equal to fertilizing one and a quarter acres of ground, producing effects as durable as do the solid evacuations. A cord of loam saturated with urine is equal to a cord of the best rotted manure. If the liquid and solid evacuations, including the litter, are kept separate, and the liquid is soaked up by the loam, it has been found they will manure land in proportion, by bulk, of seven liquid to six solid, while their actual value is as 'two to one." The Journal of Chemistry contains strong testimong in regard to the value of liquid excrement: "A cow under ordinary feeding furnishes in a year twenty thousand pounds of solid excrement and about eight thousand pounds of liquid. The comparative money value of the two is but slightly in favor of the solid." Pumpkin Seeds a Remedy.

The Stockman says "A simple but effective remedy for worms in horses is pumpkin seeds, thoroughly dried and ground in a coffee mill or pounded in a mortar until fine. Give a teaspoonful this draft must be replaced. Water at of the powder in feed morning and night the proper time allays more suffering for a week, then give one pint of new milk mixed with a half pint of West India molasses. Any molasses made from sugar cane will answer as well, but the glucose which is sold for molasses will not prove so effective. Pumpkin seeds will act on the kidneys, and horses which are kept at work should be used with great care when taking any medicines which act as a diuretic.

Diarrhoes in Caives. The calves which were fed in a field of wet alfalfa have diarrhoea. Put them in their stalls, give each of them a quart of milk, in which a handful of wheat flour has been boiled for half an hour in a kettle of boiling water. This may be repeated every six hours. If there should be any diarrhoea after a day or two, give Epsom salts two ounces, baking soda two drams, powdered ginger two drams, warm milk half ; oint. If the diarrhoea remains, give a teaspoonsful of laudanum and a table spoonful of tincture of cardamon i teacupful of wheat flour gruel after
