CHATHAM, N. B., - - JANUARY 25, 1894. COX'S BLUNDER.

Miramichi Advance.

The telephone bell rang. It was the filmsy bureau—a concern which supplied MIXED the various papers with routine news written on flimsy yellow manifold paper and telephoned "tips" of big fires as soon as the alarms were rung-that had called, 3.10 " and it sent word that a crowded east side tenement house was burning. There would be loss of life among the children, the flimsy bureau said. MIXED

Most of the reporters had gone out on their early assignments, and the fact that | he would find freedom here. He swam out there was not a man in the office to whom he could intrust so important an affair which meant liberty. Had he made his with the exception of Cox made Halfmann's always ruffled temper still worse. The necessity of giving the outlaw so profitable an assignment made him especi-

"I am very sorry to trouble you, Mr. Cox," he said, "but I wish you would try to get me some kind of a story about a fire there is in a tenement house up in Rivington street. Do you think you can

Cox stopped to light his cigarette, and after having carefully shaken himself into his overcoat he walked out. He boarded an elevated railroad train and was at the scene of the fire in 10 minutes. He was at a telephone 10 minutes later talking to his city editor.

"I shall want eight columns for this story," he said, with an excellent assumption of breathless excitement, to which, however, Halfmann was proof. "Three children have been burned to death, several fatally injured by jumping from the windows, and about 20 women and children are missing.'

"All right," answered the unmoved city editor, "I'll put it on the schedule for a column and a half. Have your 'copy' in by 10 o'clock."

Cox went to the nearest saloon, where he found the reporters sent to the fire from the other newspaper offices, and they played pinochle for the drinks for an hour or two. Then they went out and told the chief of the fire department that they wanted to use his carriage for awhile, and the chief told his driver to take them wherever they wanted to go. The six reporters crowded in and were driven around to the police station. There they got from the sergeant in charge the names of the killed as reported by the police, the official estimate of the loss by fire and a list of the injured, with the names of the various hospitals to which they had been taken. Next they drove to the residence of Banker Keane, who owned the burned houses, and as he happened to be otherwise under the necessity of dining alone that evening he asked them all to dine with him an hour later, when they could get a statement of the insurance and some interesting details about the old houses.

The fire chief's driver took each of the gang to his lodgings, and then gathered them up again after they had time to get into their dress clothes, setting them down at the Keane house just as the banker's dinner was ready to be put on the table. It was a jolly stag dinner party, and the banker told his guests a great many in-teresting stories about the old houses that had been burned. Dinner over, the reporters made a hurried round of the hospitals to which the injured had been taken and got from the hospital physicians the stories of those who were old enough to relate their experiences, and also the names of the victims who had died after being taken to the hospitals.

Cox got back to The Giraffe office about 9:30 o'clock and found the three shorthand writers who had been told to help him all ready with their pencils sharpened at both ends. "Baby Bocallininni got no milk," he began as he took off his coat, spelling the is prepared to meet the requirements of Railway, Mill and Steamboat name out so that the shorthand writer, who began taking notes at once, would get it right. Then he went on to tell the story of the fire, explaining how a cat had tipped over the oil lamp on which Baby Bocallininni's 6-year-old sister was warming milk for the infant, and set the house afire. As Cox talked he took drawing paper and india ink from his desk and began to sketch the thrilling scenes of the fire, the firemen fighting the flames from their ladders, the great parts ble water towers possible their great portable water towers pouring their torrents into the blazing structure through the upper windows and the children tum-bling through the clouds of smoke to the life nets the firemen stretched in the street below. He sketched a group of the injured children in their cots in the hospital and a cat with its tail curled into a letter B for the initial letter of the striking line that began the article. As he drew he rapidly dictated the account of the fire to the stenographers. Fifteen minutes before 11 the pile of typewritten copy and the engraver's proofs of the "cuts" were lying on the desk before

Black, the pale, schoolboyish looking night city editor, who had the reputation of being able to scent an inaccuracy clear across City Hall park. He glanced rapidly through the copy and handing it to one of the copy readers said: "Cut that down to 80 inches of space and write a 10 inch scare head for it. Here are the headlines used in the evening papers. Don't use any words that are used in any of them." Cox came into the office at 4:30 the next day. His fire article had made nearly 41/2 columns—about $40 worth of space and he did not see any necessity for working that day. Halfmann spoke to him pleasantly. This was unprecedented. There was no paper lying on his desk, and Cox felt uneasy as he noticed it. In all the 16 months he had been a reporter on The Giraffe he had never missed the paper be fore. He found a letter in his letter box. It read: Mr. Cox is informed by direction of the managing editor that his services are no longer re-

Mr. Cox will be paid one month's salary in addition to such space rate earnings due to him upon presenting this note to the cashier. Mr. Cox, in an article about a fire in Rivington street published in The Giraffe of this date, spelled the name of Mr. Heinrich Smyth-

-Arthur Sperry in Idler.

Salute island is a French convict sta tion. It is a barren strip of sandy desert, bare absolutely of vegetation. It lies very ow and is wholly unprotected from the glare of the tropical sun. Life there has not one attractive facture. I was attached a number of years ago to the fleet in the south Atlantic, and during the course of our journeying we anchored electrician and author of electrical works, off Salute island. One night I sat on the deck in the company of another officer. We were lazily smoking our after dinner cigars, when I heard a cry of "Help!" from the water below, followed by a splash. I ran immediately to the rail, as I thought it was a case of a man overboard. drawn up on deck, and at once began an He was a convict from the dread station on the island. He had seen our flag, and he had swum out to the ship. "Would we take him aboard and enable him to es-planation. It was altogether too serious a Druggists, at 50c. and $1.00 matter for me. The admiral of the fleet was then dining on board the very ship where I was. I sent an officer to him asking him if he would come on deck. I shall never forget the picture presented full dress of his rank, as the dinner was one of ceremony. The prisoner was tall, gaunt and haggard. He stood in his convict dress, in an attitude of entreaty. The admiral said, "Well, sir," and then the man began to tell his story in the clear, well modulated French of an educated person. According to his story, he had committed no crime. He had been exiled for his political opinions. He had a wife and family at home. He had come to the flag of Britain, the emblem of appeal in vain? The admiral was deeply moved, but his face was stern as he said: "I am sorry, sir, but I can do nothing for you. It is not your life or mine that would be at stake. If I were to take you away, I should be guilty of interfering with the police regulations of a friendly foreign nation, and that would be a sufficient cause for a war, in which many innocent Lives would be lost. I am sorry, but you must go back." The prisoner's attitude was now one of intense dejection. He said, without further argument, "Sir, you have just condemned me to death. "How is that?" asked the admiral. "According to the regulations of the island, which is governed by military law," replied the convict, "any prisoner who attempts to escape is shot. At 9 o'clock the rounds of the cells are made. If a prisoner is absent at that hour, his absence is considered as proof of an attempt to get Our admiral started as if he had heard the crack of a shot. "Heavens, man!" said he, "what time He pulled out his watch as he spoke with a nervous wrench.

"It is only 20 minutes to 9! I will get Without a second's delay the admiral turned to the side of the ship opposite the island. A few hurried orders were given in a low tone. A boat was dropped. The oars were promptly muffled, and a boats' crew clambered down like monkeys. The prisoner was hidden in the bottom of the boat, and within four minutes from the time the order was given the boat shot out on its errand of mercy toward the island. A little black cloud came across the moon, just as the boat started, as if the elements were lending a kindly hand in concealing the return of the unhappy man. The officers who had heard the story all swarmed to the rail with their glasses We watched in the darkness for the appearance of lights some signal of alarm. The boat landed without a single sign of disturbance. The prisoner was back a few minutes before 9, in ample time to return to his cell. A sigh of relief was breathed by us all when we saw the boat anything unusual in the appearance of the But still we felt very uneasy. The admiral walked up and down talking about the poor man. Some way he felt that it was not all right. We could not feel certain of his escape. We sat up nearly all night studying the island through our coming back and nowhere any evidence of The next morning we felt that we must satisfy in some way our doubts. The admiral decided to pay a visit of ceremony to the French military commander of the island. The officers on board our ships were invited to accompany him. We thought surely in a visit of this kind we would hear if any unusual event like an attempt at an escape or an execution had taken place, We all put on full uniform for a visit of ceremony. The admiral's gig was lowered, and we set out for the island about 10 o'clock. We were received with great poiteness. The French commandant invited us to remain for a midday breakfast. At the close of the meal the commandant selected a young officer of his staff and directed him to turn out with a guard of honor to accompany us back to our boat. The commandant, in giving his instructions, added, "When these gentlemen are ready to depart, give them my message."

This phrase sent a cold chill through our company. We felt that everything was not

We marched back in silence to our boat. When every one was in position and the oars were ready to let fall and pull away, the young French officer said, with his hand to his head in an attitude of military

"This is the message of the commandant of this post. He wishes me first to Piano and Pipe Organ. resent to you his compliments. You are brave and honorable men. You have attempted to do a merciful act. Last night a prisoner escaped from this island. He was seen by the sentry as he entered the water. He was seen to swim out in the direction of your ship. We all saw that he was taken on board. Every gun in the battery of this island was brought to bear on your ship awaiting your decision. We saw you when you let fall the boat to bring the prisoner back. We watched the boat advance to the island through our night glasses. We received the prisoner as soon as you landed him. Gentlemen, the prisoner was shot at 4 o'clock this morning."-Pearson's Weekly.

A Rare Dish. A couple of friends enter a restaurant. The waiter comes bustling up: "What can I get you, gentlemen?" "For pity's sake, give us a little respite," said one of them. The waiter trotted away, but came back presently to tell them, "Very sorry, gentlemen, respite is off!"-Paris Croix.
