THE SANTA MARIA.

"This is a queer turn of affairs, sure! To have been walking Broadway only a week ago, wearing civilized clothes, and now to be here in this sandy little town alled Cactus City, on the very edge of Arizona, dressed like a cowboy!"

While he made this little speech to nimself. Ben Trumbull was gazing into he small and uncertain mirror in his oom in the Gold Nugget Hotel in Cacus City, trying to admire by sections ais broad sombrero hat, his red flannel shirt, and the pair of new revolvers in the belt at his waist.

Incidentally, he also saw reflected in the glass a handsome boyish face, a pair of gray eyes that had looked out upon the world for eighteen years or thereabouts, and wavy chestnut hair that positively refused to be brushed into smoothness.

"But the costume is not the queerest part of it," he went on. "To think that such a youngster as I should have been selected for such an important and difficult job. And to be actually in the service of the ---. "Well, in my first twenty-four hours here I've made one good move in getting acquainted with 'Deadshot" Horton. I feel half sorry for him, too, though I suppose if I unearth the gang he'll have to go with the rest. But he talks so much about his folks up in Nebraska, and thinks so much of them, there must be some good in him. It's about time he was here, too. The words were hardly out of his mouth before there came a heavy rap at the door, and when it was opened "Deadshot" Horton walked in. He was considerably older than Ben Trumbull. probably ten years older, and much heavier, and was muscular. But notwithstanding his cowboy dress and the very large revolvers in his belt and the long spurs on his boots he looked like a man to be trusted. "If you can assay these nuggets for me, Mr. Trumbull," were the first words, after they had shaken hands, "you'll be doing me a big favor—the biggest kind of a favor. And I don't doubt you can do it. since you say you can—only you seem such a young chap to be equal to that kind of work."

"There's nothing difficult about that," Ben laughingly replied, "even for a young chap. You know I am fresh out of the School of Mines in New York, as I told you: and if I couldn't assay a bit of silver I'd have a poor chance of making a fortune down here in Arizona." Ben had brought with him from the east an assaying outfit and in a short time was able to announce that the nuggets contained nearly 75 per cent. of pure Horton let himself drop back into his chair, and Ben saw that his eyes were noist. For some moments he could not "It's not for myself I care so much, Mr. Trumbull," he said, at length in a husky voice. "It's such grand news for the folks at home, for mother and my little sisters. And it's good news for you, too, Mr. Trumbull: for, as I said, I must have a partner, lad." "Well, if you put it that way," Ben answered, "you must tell me something about it. I don't ask you, of course, where your claim is." "It's this way, lad," Horton said, his voice still a little unsteady. "You see "m working here for the Santa Maria ilver Mining Company, and the mines rejust two miles across the border- in Mexico—that makes them eight miles from Cactus City. The Santa Maria is one of the old-time Mexican mines, gone nto new hands. My business is to guard he silver ingots that they cast at the nine and send over here to Cactus City very day in a mule wagon, locked up in big chest. The silver goes into the lactus City bank, and I get my receipt or it. Next day it is sent to Fairbank, te nearest railroad station, and so on ast. Every evening I guard that chest or ingots till it is locked up in the bank. "Empty?" Ben asked.

"No, not empty," Horton replied; filled with chemicals, quicksilver, all orts of mine supplies. Well, in over that eight miles twice every day, have time to look 'round a bit; and one tay while the mules were resting, I made my find. That was nearly two made my find. That was nearly two months ago, but I've not been sure till this day that I'd struck the real stuff, or I'm not an educated man like yourelf. Mr. Trumbull, and I was afraid to have my metal assayed here in Cactus City. Anyhow, I bought the land for a song—it's just over the border in Mexico—and I can hardly believe even now that's it's all true."

that's it's all true.' "Every day you bring in the chest of ingots from the Santa Maria, do you?" "Every blessed day, sir," Horton re-lied. "Sundays and holidays in-

"They must be making money," Ben suggested. "I should like to go out with you some day and have a look at

"I'm sure I'd like to have you go, sir," Horton answared, "but it's not goesible. They don't allow any visitors o go into the mine, nor to come about the place at all."

It was late that night before Horton left Ben's room, and when he did go Ben was in possession of all the information about the Santa Maria mine that his companion could give him. Somehow Ben seemed to take more interest in the Banta Maria mine than in Horton's great "I think I know an honest face when I see one," Ben said to himself before he went to bed, "and if it's possible I'll save that man, but I'll make sure of his innocence first.' For the next two weeks Ben and his new friend were together nearly every new friend were together nearly every night, for Horton slept in Cactus City; but every day Ben was out attending to business. "looking for some chance in the mining way," as he said, meanwhile keeping an eye on the Cactus City bank and the people who visited it, and making many acquaintances—imbibing information about them all, without giving much about himself. Several times he found it necessary to ride over to waking. he found it necessary to ride over to Fairbank, where the ingots were shipped by rail, and at one time disappeared entirely for three days.

"Horton, I want you to come up to my room before you start in the morn-ing," he said to his friend soon after his mysterious disappearance. "Don't fell me, will you? It's very important for

Horton promised, and shortly after daylight the next morning he was in Ben's room, where Ben was still lying in

"I'm going to ask you to do a very surprising thing for me, old fellow," Ben said, sitting up in bed. "There's pencil and paper on the table. I want you to send a note to the Cactus City bank people, saying that you are not able to go out to the mines to-day, and that they must send somebody else in your place."

ralgia radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action upon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at once the cause and the disease immediately disappears, The first dose greatly benefits. 75 cents. Warranted by J. Pallen & Son.

A broken friendship may be soldered, but will never be sound. "Not able to go to the mines?" Horton exclaimed. "Why, lad,

I want you to do it as a particular favor to me. I must have a long talk with you to-day. You can trust me, can't you?" "I'm sure I can, lad, but-"Hold on, then," Ben interrupted again. "I'll put it another way. You think a great deal of your mother and sisters. I know. For their sake, sit down and write the note." Wonderingly Horton obeyed, and in a few minutes the note was written and sent. But with all his questioning he he could get no explanation from Ben before breakfast. After the early meal, when they had returned to the room. Ben carefully closed the door and unfolded his important business.

"I am going to give you a plan, Horton," he said, "that will put money into both our pockets. I suppose you know Druggists, at 50c. and $1.00. that, although the present value of silver is very low, still a silver dollar is worth a handred cents. If you sell the silver | hinges. from your projected mine by weight you will get say sixty cents an ounce for it. If you coin it into dollars yourself you get a dollar an ounce." "But that would be-" Horton in-

"Held on! Hear me out." Ben con-"That would be counterfeiting, as you were about to say, even though we made the dollars of pure silver. It would be in this country, where there is a special law against it. But your silver lies just across the border in Mexico, where American dollar could be made with comparative safety. We could make them at the mine, and then every day you could bring over a chest of your own silver dollars instead of a chest of somebody else's silver ingots.

Just think how we can heap up the money! Think of it, man!" "Deadshot" Horton sat with his head in his hands and made no reply.

, 'Think of it!' Ben repeated, "Mil lions! Millions!" For more than a minute Horton did not answer; then he raised his head and replied:

"You know it is not for myself, lad, that I want to make money. You know who it is for. And how could I take money to my mother and my sister that I'd make by counterfeiting? No, my lad, I couldn't do it, and what's more, you mustn't do it. You're a smarter man than I am, my boy, and you've a great deal more education, but I've been in the world longer than you have and I've had more experience; and take my word for it, money made that way is not worth having. No, Mr. Trumbull, I couldn't do it; and you mustn't either."

A pity it is that there was no one in the room to take a snap shot at Ben as he sprang forward and seized Horton's

"Horton, old fellow," he exclaimed, you're as good as gold. I was sure of it before, but since I've tried you I am doubly sure. I knew you wouldn't do such a thing no more than I would, not for all the millions there might be in it. But I want to ask you a question or two. Did you ever notice that when you took the chest back to the mines in the morning it was always as heavy as when you brought it back here full of silver?" "I've noticed sometimes," Horton replied, "that it seemed pretty heavy. But there's quicksilver in it, that's heavy, you know." Ben went to the window and looked out.

"Now, I don't have to be mysterious any longer;" he said 'look at the crowd in the street. They are following the Cactus City bank people, who have just been arrested. All the people on this the border who have anything to do with the Santa Maria mine are wearing handcuffs except yourself. I was sure you were innocent, even before I tried to tempt you a moment ago, and that was why I wanted you here with me to-day. If you had gone to your work you would have been wearing handcuffs too. But I couldn't let you go out and be arrested. Horton, old fellow." "Arrested!" Horton exclaimed. "Is it for smuggling? The stuff has all come over the border without paying duty, I suppose; but that is not my "Much worse than that," Ben replied. "It's for counterfeiting. There is no Santa Maria mine, Horton. Your entire company is nothing but a gang of counterfeiters. I may as well tell you at once that I am a secret service of

"You, lad!" Horton exclaimed. "Such a boy as you a detective!" "Yes," Ben laughed, "such a boy as I. The government often selects young fellows to do such work in cases where old detectives would be easily recognized. I was satisfied when I first got here that you had nothing to do with it, and that you were working honestly for the com-pany. But the company is nothing but a gang of counterfeiters. The old mine was exhausted centuries ago, and all they mine there now is rock, just for appearances. I ought to know, for I have worked in the mine three days this week. And the Cactus City bank is only a blind. All its officers are members of the gang—I have thorough evidence of it. What you just now indignantly refused to do with your eyes open, you have been doing blindly for the last year. These fellows got no silver from their mine, but they have been buying silver in this country, and you have carried a chest full of American silver to them every morning. They have made this into silver dollars, real silver dollars, and you have brought it back at Chatham, N: B. have carried a chest full of American silmade this into silver dollars, real silver dollars, and you have brought it back at night. The bank people were all confederates It was one of the greatest counterfeiting gangs ever organized. A party of United States officers have been in the neighborhood for a week, waiting for me to give them the signal, and I gave it last nighs. Those of the gang that are over the border will come later, but all who are in this country are in all who are in this country are in Ladies Spring Jackets; "And you have saved me from prison!" Horton exclaimed, seizing both of Ben's

"No; only saved you from some trouble," Ben answered. "Your innocence should have been proved in time. But come, it is safe for us to go now. To-morrow I am off for the East, to raise capital to open up "Deadshot" Horton's (and my) silver mine, and make some honest money for us
