MIRIAM'S MISTAKE.

The bathers on the beach had clasped hands to breast an inrolling wave; the band was playing on the breezy porches of the hotel, grand equipages whirled over the glittering sands; a ship in full sail was visible in the channel; the sun was sinking into the water line of the horizon, "Miriam," Brice Ventnor said, his voice husky, his manner agitated, "I have the right to ask your reason for this rejection." He was locking at her with so much di- in a word, did all they could to make him rectness that she did not care to have her | comfortable. "No, you have not," she replied, the color coming and going in her face. "Still I'll tell you. I am prompted by revenge.' "By revenge?" "Yes," was her measured reply. "I want you to suffer." "And you enjoy it? Then you know how much I love you, it seems. I always knew you did not question that." They had been seated on a bench outside a small pavilion, but were now standing. She was suffering more than she would have cared to have him know and was impatient to get away.

"Pray, in what way have I wronged you?" he asked. "Not in thought, word or act. I consider myself the soul of honor." "Oh, you do?" and she laughed mockingly. "Instead, you are a man without printhe hotel, reaction set in, and her great grief showed how devotedly she loved the man whom she insulted. She flung herself upon the bed and cried as if her heart were broken.

"Oh, Blanche!" she exclaimed aloud between her hysterical sobs, "you are avenged, but you will never know what it has cost me. Oh, why was I to love him so passion ately before I heard about his perfidy?" Early though it was, she retired to bed, but it was almost dawn before she fell asleep, so intense was her suffering. * * * * * *

Three years later again found Miriam Gray at the seashore. She had not met Brice Ventnor during that interval, nor had she heard from him. She was as handsome as ever and more royal in her manners, but her face and conversation lacked brilliancy. She was more quiet and reserved, more chary in her friendships, ready to suspect and heartily tired of the hollowness of fashionable life. Her love affair with Brice Ventnor had caused the change. In punishing him for his perfidy to her cousin Blanche she had sacrificed herself. She could never love another man as she had loved him. As she was one day walking on the beach with her cousin Blanche they suddenly came upon Brice Ventnor. He was alone and stood still for a minute, the meeting and stood still for a minute, the meeting was so unexpected to him. The board walk was so high and narrow just there, and the ladies could not get away.

reproachfully at Miriam, as if half inclined to speak, then sprang from the walk and strode toward the nearest pavilion. Miriam recognized him and was touched at the look he had bestowed upon her. "Who was that superb looking gentle-man?" asked her cousin Blanche. "Did he bow to you or to me?"

He lifted his bat, looked mournfully and Receiving no reply, she looked up into her companion's face. "Why, Miriam, how pale you are," she exclaimed, "and how agitated." "Blanche, do you mean to say that you do not know this man?" asked Miriam, her voice a mere whisper.

cousin's reply. "Oh!" cried Miriam, catching her breath, one hand unconsciously clinched. "Is he not the man who trifled with you?" "Brice Ventnor?" exclaimed Blanche.

The blood receded from Miriam's lips, and a low moan escaped from them. She grew so weak for a little while that she was forced to lean heavily upon Blanche, who conducted her to one of the rustic benches. She fanned her, rubbed her hands and spoke to her in soothing tones. When her cousin had sufficiently recovered, she said: "Mirian, what is this mystery?"
"Oh, I am so afraid that I have wronged him, for I supposed that I was avenging presenting you with this slight token of my you. His name is Brice Ventnor." "Eh!" exclaimed Blanche, who was beginning to comprehend. "He is not the Brice Ventnor that I knew," and her voice shook with emotion. "Can it be that there are two gentlemen of the same name? I remember hearing him say that he had some cousins. Oh, I am so sorry, and soso-glad." Miriam Gray looked at her friend in a sort of stupor. "Sorry, dear, because of what you have suffered and glad because everything will yet come out all right." Miriam mournfully shook her head.

"He will never forgive me," she said.
"He is proud and sensitive. My words cut deep, all the more so because undeserved. I gave him no explanation—no chance to defend himself."

"You can explain now," suggested "No," replied Miriam in a strained tone, proud look coming to her face. She wrung her hands and moaned, and nothing that Blanche could say carried consolation with it. Her love had been but dormant-it reasserted itself. Brice Ventnor had been blameless. She had deeply wronged him. She was paying the penalty for her haste. "I would tell him all," advised Blanche. "He may spurn me," cried Miriam through her sobs. "He may be as cruel and apreasonable as I was and with more of an excuse. It happened three years ago. He may love some one else now; nay, he may be married to another. There is nothing for me to do but to remain silent and-en-Her grief was so great that Blanche ceased her efforts to pacify her. The orchestra was playing a quadrille, the dancers were gliding gracefully to and fro, lights flashed, diamonds sparkled, fans glittered, eyes beamed. Miriam Gray sat on the veranda by an open window, looking in at the dancers, her face and form plainly visible. A gentleman stepped from among the shadows on the porch. He stopped be side Miriam. "Miriam," he simply said, though his voice trembled. Ah! She knew who had spoken. No one else could have pronounced her name with such sweet tenderness. The blood filled her face, then left it deathly pale. She lifted her eyes swiftly to his, a fond giad, appealing look in them .- Amusing commanded the victorious frigate, and they did their utmost to soften the captivity of an opponent whose stubborn valor had won the admiration of them all. Contenting themselves with exacting a pledge from their prisoner that he would make no attempt to escape—which indeed there was little chance of his doing out there in the open sea, with no friendly sail in sight-the captain and officers of the

The frigate, having received not a few severe injuries in the recent fight, was making for Carthagena-the nearest Colombian port-in order to refit, and all went well till they were within a short distance of the coast, when the weather, which had hitherto been beautifully fine, suddenly became thick and hazy, culminating at length in one of those formidable sea fogs which so often roll in from the north Atlantic when no one expects them, literally turning day into night. The Colombian captain, though familiar with these waters from his childhood, was now "at sea" in every sense of the words, and brave as he was began to feel uncomfortable. it, "you might have shied a biscuit aboard." In another instant the stranger had vanished like a dream. "By St. Jago!" muttered the sailors to each other. "That official Americano" (American officer) "has been a lucky prisoner for us, for if it hadn't been for him we should have gone straight to the bottom, ship and all."
