Is it Kidd's Treasure? (Boston Herald .) About a month ago S. A. Isaacson, a

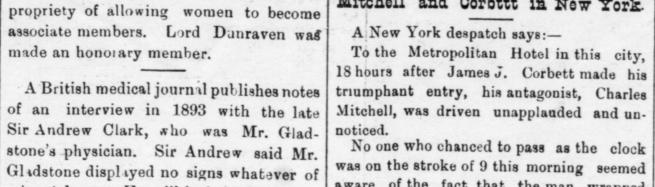

Boston clothing dealer, leased the build ing at the corner of Main and Lexington streets in Waltham for the purpose of establishing a business in that city. He took possession about two weeks ago, and since then he has had a gang of carpenters at work making extensive repairs.

Yesterday, while the men were at work they unearthed a curious shaped leather box, which was stored away between the partitions near an old-fashioned chimney. Upon opening the box the men were surprised to find that it contained valuables worth several thousand dollars. The men turned the box over to Mr. Isaacson, who examined it, and found the following articles : Two watches of antique make, a diamond stud weighing eight carats; bag of Spanish doubloons estimated to be worth $250; a genuine pear necklace, and a miscellaneous lot of finger rings, together with a lot of papers and deeds dating back more than 100 years. The building in which the treasure was found is owned by M. P. Collins, proprie tor of Hotel Waltham, and is supposed to be more than 150 years old. No one in the city can tell anything about the place back more than half a century, but it is known to have been used for a postoffice, jewelry store and also for dwelling purposes within
