IT'S VERA WEEL. It's vera weel, throughout the day, When ta'en up wi' wark or play,

To think a man can live alway Wi'oot a wifey. But it's anither thing at night. To sit alone by can'le light, Or gang till rest when sharp winds bite, Wi'oot a wifey.

It's vera weel when cla'es are new, To think they'll always last so, And look as well as they do noo, Wi'oot a wifey. But when the holes begin to show, The stitches rip, the buttons go,

What in the warl's a man to do Wi'oot a wifey. It's vera weel when skies are clear, When frien's are true and lassies dear, To think ye'll gang through life, nae fear, Wi'out a wifey.

But clouds will come the skies athwart, Lassies will marry, rien's maun part; What then can cheer your saddened heart! A dear, wee wifey. It's vera weel when young and hale, But when you're suld, and grazed and frail, And your blithe spirits 'gin to fail,

But mayhap then the lassie dear Will treat you, offers wi'a sneer; Because you're cranky, gray and sere, Ye'll get nae wifey. Then haste ye, haste, ye silly ioon; Rise up and seek about the toon, And get heaven's greatest earthly boon, You'll want a wifey.

THE MADMAN.

The man began thus: "My name, Director, cannot be altogether unknown to you. I am Giuseppe Gabrini. Although still young—I am thirty-eight years old —my inventions have brought me, if I may venture to say so, a good deal of renown. Of course, you have seen in the newspapers that an American syndicate has paid me $100,000 for my electric "These details simply serve to show you that I am not an ordinary man, and will, at the same time, make you understand the extent of the misfortune which has befallen me." A pause, then he continued: "About seven years ago I married Clara Renan-di, a charming girl of very good family.

At that time I was a young engineer, unknown to fame, working hard, but earning little. There were moments when it was pretty hard to get on, but my wife helped and encouraged me in the struggle for existence. "Thus two years went by. Then I succeeded in making the company for which I was working accept an inven-tion of mine, a machine for extracting fossilized carbon by a new system. I was paid a very decent price for it.

From that moment my means were most comfortable, and I was able, therefore, to dedicate myself entirely to the study and development of my electric railway, which I had already been at work upon. From that instant I ought to have been perfectly happy, and, indeed, I thought that I was. * * * Alas! Fate had decreed otherwise Alas! Fate had decreed otherwise. "One day—take note of this, Director—one day I, who for lack of time read and really doubted the truth of the tale. But little by little it seemed to me less strange, and I began to look into the question, even reading the books of specialists on the subject. For hours at a time my mind would dwell on the matter, and in spite of myself I found my brain perturbed by the mysterious problems of will power and desire. "Two days later, while dining with my wife, and still absorbed in meditation, I began to handle my knife rather feverishly, thinking as I did so that it was with a weapon similar to this that the workman had murdered his children. * * I made a violent gesture. * * * * A sharp cry recalled me to myself. Clara showed me a long red scratch on "'Are you crazy?" she exclaimed. 'See what you have done!' "I did not reply, but with increasing agitation looked at the hand which she joy I felt when I saw that blood! * * I was suddenly assailed by a wild de- able and raging, suddenly became quiet sire to see more of it; to see it flowing in a stream. * * * * Oh, to hold a When they spoke to him of his wife woman tight in one's grasp, push her whom he had killed, he wept bitterly. woman tight in one's grasp, push her down trembling and frightened, and while she weeps and cries for mercy, while she sobs and screams by turn, drive a knife slowly into her bosom.

* * Yes, that was what I wanted to do now. Kill a woman—my wife!

* * This horrible idea took possession of me, wrote itself on my brain in letters of fire. Then began a terrible, almost savage battle within me, a struggle without cessation. "I forced myself to care more and more this morning the temptation was stronger than ever, and I decided to put was an end to it, once for all, so with knife in hand I entered my wife's room.

* * She had just left it. Then, like a madman, I started to run, and came here to beg you to protect me from myself, to shut me up, put me in a strait-jacket even, if necessary; anything, oh, even, if necessary; anything, oh, any-thing, to prevent my committing a

The superintendent of the asylum, who had grown a trifle pale during the recital, touched the bell at his side, and as an attendant appeared,

"It shall be as you desire, sir."

Very blonde, with sapphire-blue eyes and that delicate, doll-like beauty so attractive in some women, she lay back in a chaise longue in an attitude of absolute repose, musing. * * * As the silvery tones of the clock chimed the hour—3 o'clock—Signora Gabrini turned her head slowly. She fetched a sigh and her eyes sparkled. Only a few minutes to wait now, and somebody she wanted very much to see would arrive —her last admirer. She had had many, but in the various flirtations she carried on from time to time no man had ever attracted her as did this one—no, not even at that period—before he became insane and was confined in a madhouse -when, her husband too much absorbed in scientific researches to pay much attention to her, she had sought diversion in this pastime, had she cared for any of the knights who danced attendance on her. True, in those days her ardor might have been quelled a little by the fear, always, of rousing the latent jealousies in her husband's nature. It was not easy to judge what observations the engineer might be making outside his work, apparently so ab

Unconscious how deep her liking was for this latest flame, and how dangerous it might become in view of her present lonely state, she found herself actually counting the minutes until he should be

Suddenly she trembled—she heard The door opened, and Signora Gabrini sprang to her feet, livid with terror. She gave a scream: "The madman!" But Gabrini, very calm, almost smil-

"You did not expect me, did you, madam? * * * Pray calm yourself, however. I am no longer mad. He drew a long breath, then went on: other * * * so, be seated. No one can disturb us. I have locked the door. Appalted, knowing herself to be perfectly helpless, however, she obeyed. He

"I shall be brief. You know what difficulties I had to contend with at the beginning, what hand to hand struggles I had with poverty, and what an im-mense amount of labor I had to accomplish before I succeeded in working my way out of the obscurity in which I was vegitating. Notwithstanding the absorbing nature of my occupations and studies, I managed to steal as much time as possible from them to devote to you. I am convinced that I did my duty in this regard. But were you appreciative of my efforts, grateful for the attention? No. Within two years after our marriage, not finding my devotion sufficient, you were encouraging admiration from another source, were carrying on a flirtation. * * *

She protested with a gesture, but he simply went on: "On, it's useless for you to deny anything. * * * I can prove the truth of my assertions. * * * I have found letters, by chance, of course, and, * * anyway it is not necessary to go into details; suffice it to say that I know ex actly what your course has been. Harmless flirtations? Oh, no! You are naturally surprised that, knowing all this, have maintained such an impassible demeanor, have kept silence so long. But what could I do? I did not wish my name, already growing famous, to become a byword for the public to scoff | the other day. at, as must assuredly have been the case if my conjugal troubles were noised abroad: much less did I propose to furnish gossip for the newspapers. And again, I really hoped that you might stop all this nonsense-you see what a tool I was? I was ready to forgive you, to tike you back to my heart, at the first word of regret. * * * I wanted to be lieve in you, but 'twas no use. You were frivolous, I had almost said corrupt, to the core. Well, I had not strength of mind enough to rise above this daily torment, to shut my eyes to your continuous flirtations, carried on in my very presence. * * * So I decided to put an seemed to me that there was but one way to accomplish this, and that, to kill you." * * * Clara started from her chair with a cry of terror, but, seizing her by the wrists, he forced her back to her seat, and with a strange light in his eyes and his voice dry and hard he added: * * * Kill you Yes, this is the idea which has been formulating itself in my mind for a lon-time, * * * but I wished to kill you without compromising myself in any way. * * I began by feigning insanity. * * Oh, I concocted some kind of a story, and they shut me up in the asylum, you know. Then, of course, I had to do a good bit of acting, pre tending to have sudden and violent at tacks of my malady, throwing myself o: my keepers, scratching and liting them * * * but I was only waiting my chance to escape them. The occasion came about to-day, and here I am. My vengeagee accomplished, I shall return to the madhouse. Doubtless I shall be tried for murder; but I shall be ac quitted, and they will take me back to the asylum. I shall be kept there a year, perhaps five: then, when they see how docile, quiet and calm I am, they will declare me cured, and I shall regain my liberty. Then, with no further ob stacles in my way, no chains to bind or oppress me, and a tranquil spirit, I shall once more consecrate myself to study, to science." * * * He ceased. Clara, her breath labored. her eyes staring at him in helpless ter ror, lay back on the chaire longue, pow erless to move. * * * Finally, as h rose, tears began to flow from her eye and down her pallid cheeks. Sobbing she threw herself at his feet, imploring the state of the state him, as she dragged herself along on he knees, to have mercy, to have pity of her. But he had already seized her by the hair, and, as he pushed her back, put his hand in his pocket, and drawing forth a dagger, drove it at one blow into his wife's bosom.

end to the situation once for all, and i.

Giuseppe Gabrini was not prosecuted. He was declared irresponsible and shu: up again in the asylum until cured. He was there eight months. At the end of the eight months Dr. Leonardo Carbonelli, who professed to be able to cure mad people by the aid of shining looking glasses—which process, however, had thus far been unsuccessful—asked to have charge of Gabrini's case. His held out, and at the drops of blood rising on the white skin. Oh, the fierce joy I felt when I saw that black the fierce stupendous. The first experience stupendous. prised the doctor, even. Gabrini, irrit and docile. He recovered his reason Two months later he was completely cured, and they hastened to give him back his freedom. The newspapers talked at length of this miraculous cure Dr. Leonardo Carbonelli received decoration, and was made commenda tore of the Crown of Italy.

Success in Dairying. No one need expect success in dairy ing who does not like the business. The man who does not like cows, who hates for my adored Clara, but in vain.

* * * Finally—finally—how can I say it? This life has been going on for two months. * * * Until to-day I had been able to control myself. * * * But man who does not like tows, who hates to milk, who never goes into the stable without a club which he needs but the east excuse to use, who thinks it all nonsense to 'stuff' a cow, who is content to sit behind the stove these cold days while his cows are shivering on the north side of the barn, or tramping off a quarter of a mile after a drink of ice water—such a man will not succeed at the dairy business and probably not at any other. Determination to make the very best of the material at hand, and sparing no effort to that end, is a very essential element of success.
