A STRANGE TALE.

It was at our last promotion dinner at the Military Circle. Of course the conversation MIXED | turned on those who had disappeared—the dead-with that "Don't you remember?" which is like a refrain to those banquets filled with recollections of the past. We were at the psychological moment when, through the action of good wines and of digestion, one feels a heightened nervous sensibility producing a peculiar spiritual > "And D'Iramond," said Chavoye. "You recollect D'Iramond!" Suddenly grave, Commander Faber said: "Gentlemen, I was then captain of the Seventeenth chasseurs, and I declare to you I cannot think of the affair without feeling the distress that seizes you before problems that our reason refuses to comprehend." "Tell us the particulars. We want the details!" was the cry all around. "Well, gentlemen, it was five years ago.

We were then at St. Germain, the most adorable of garrisons. Mornings in the forests, joyous breakfasts at mess, flirtations on the terrace and at night the grand ALEX. Captain d'Iramond, with his name, his great fortune, his elegance and graceful swagger, held his own brilliantly amid our mad revels, always the last at supper and the first in the saddle. "Suddenly everything changed. The Duchess d'Iramond died of aneurism of the heart. From the moment when the captain had no longer his mother, mamma, as he said with a filial tenderness, a touching contrast in the mouth of that big mustachioed boy, from the day when he could not go to her from time to time to recover from our dissipations, he was not himself. He ceased to go to Paris, and beyond the duties of the service he never left home, where he remained for hours before a portrait of the duchess painted by Cabanel. "He became more and more taciturn and more and more concentrated in himself. One fine winter morning, going to his house on the way to the maneuver, I found him especially agitated. "'You will laugh at me,' he said at once, 'but the most extraordinary adventure has happened to me,'

"'What was it?" "'You know Father Vincent? Imagine my seeing him come this morning accompanied by a choir boy and bearing the holy sacrament. You may know I was aston-"'You have made a mistake, sir; doubt-

"A lady?"

"'Yes, a lady whom I met on the square by the church—ah, there she is!' "'And Father Vincent showed me the portrait of mamma hanging on the wall. I own that I could not help feeling a tug at "'You are quite sure that this is the lady

"'Yes, captain-oh, I should recognize her amid a thousand others. She insisted so, with such a gentle and sad air. She said to me: 'Run quick! There is but just time!' "'Then I made no further objections. Much affected, I confessed and received the sacrament. Perhaps the priest had an hallucination. Perhaps he had been swayed by a resemblance. Anyway it is done, and now forward for the maneuver.' "I remember that it was cold and dry, like today. D'Iramond mounted a superb chestnut that he had bought the day pre-

the French. How a Dying Man Feels. Numerous experiments made in hospitals and upon heroic scientists who have permitted tests to be made upon themselves right down to the moment of death, warrant these conclusions: That a dying man may be burned with redbot irons and yet not feel the least pain; that consciousness may remain in the dying almost to the moment of actual dissolution, but that most people generally lose the power of thought long before death; that in cases of death where there seems to be extreme suffering. with writhing and spasms, such phenome na are generally due to reflex muscular action; also that fear weakens the muscular system and hastens death, while the re-

DOOMED TO DIE.

With pity at my heart, I stood and gazed upon the man before me; a man, a fellow-being, doomed by a merciless court-martial to die; to leave the bright and beautiful world around him, and to be ushered alone into "the valley of the shadow of death." A noble-looking man he was, as he stood there, unmoved amid the enemies that surrounded him, and a haughty, half-defiant, expression rested upon his handsome, daring face. He was a Union spy, captured in the Confederate lines and bearing upon his person treasonable papers sufficient to have condemned a regiment. He had made a good fight, but he was at last overpowered, the papers found upon him, and, after a speedy trial, was con-after years; and, besides, the spy was young and nandsome, by his deportment evidently a gentleman, and his reckless bravery had won my admiration. Nightfall came upon our camp, and the following morning the spy was to be called out and shot. I had been appointed to take charge of the execution, and, seated in my tent, I was thinking, thinking of the unpleasant duty I was to perform on the morrow.

"Lieutenant, a note for you, sir." I started as the orderly's voice broke the stillness of the night, aud, taking the outstretched rote, read "Pardon me for disturbing your slumbers but as you command the detachment that wil to-morrow usher my soul into eternity, would see you, if your duties as an officer do not urge to the contrary. Hoping you will grant the favor, I remain, with respect,

"Say that I will come." A few moments later, and I stood in the presence of the condemned man. "Mr. Hayes, you sent for me." "I did, lieutenant; and it was because of your kindness to me during the trial, and also that I saw in your eyes pity for my fate.' "I do feel for you, from my heart I do;

and sincerely wish I had not the unpleasant duty devolving upon me of ordering your execution to-morrow." "I have a favor to ask of you, sir; to please order the guard to remove some distance from the tent, as it is a confession I wish to make." I gave a command to the guard to retire a few paces, and returning to the tent, Hayes at once began:

"I am no spy, sir, but am condemned under circumstantial evidence. I came into the Confederate lines to visit my mother, who lives in the south, al though she is Union in her feelings. After a visit to her of a few days I started to return, and by the road-side came upon a dying man clad as a Confederate soldier. Imagine my surprise to recognize in him a noted spy of our own army, and also recognizing me, he informed me that he had been wounded the night before, by being fired upon by a party of Confederate cavalry, and had ridden on until he could go no further. He knew he was to die, and intrusted to my care the papers he had about him. watched over the poor fellow until he died, and then hollowing out a shallow "'Left him alone in his glory,' and proceeded on my way. "I have little more to add, except that am a major of cavalry in the United States Army, and wish that you will take my private papers from me after I am dead and send them to an address I will give you. Now this is all I ask, except that you will send me pen and ink by the orderly when you return." oy the orderly when you return."

Thus we parted; and finding a scout SHERIFF'S awaiting me at my tent upon my return. I gave him pen, ink and paper, and ordered him to ride over to the tent where the doomed man was with them, and to tell the guard to release his hands of the shackles while he wrote, but to keep a close watch upon him.

A few minutes after, I was startled by a loud shout, one, two, three shots in rapid succession, and then the rapid rush of hoofs by my quarters. I was just in time to see the scout's horse dash swiftly by and recognize. by the moonlight, the commanding form of Wilbur Hayes, the Union spy, in the saddle. Men mounted in hot haste, and a chase commenced, but the daring soldier escaped, and thus saved him from the

Upon inquiry, I learned that when the manacles had been removed from his wrist, Hayes, watching his opportunity, with two rapid blows struck the guard and the scout to the ground, and springing lightly on the back of the scout's horse, rode rapidly away, followed by the shots from the sentinels in the immediate vicinity.

Idealists are persons who profess to deny the existence of material things, and claim that ideas, beliefs and facts are all that there are in the world. For example, we are never ill; we only fancy or believe that we are. If we had full faith that we were well, we would be so. There is something in the ideas, for every one knows that the mind has much to do with the condition of the body. It is entirely possible to cure some diseases by persistently believing that they do not exist and acting accordingly. But all maladies will not yield to
