A DUEL IN THE SKY.

They were brothers—came into the world the same day, the same hour, and in like manner, they appeared before the tent of Pedro Longman, a showman, who traveled from village to village with his troop of acrobats, jugglers and train-

"What can you do?" he asked.
"Anything requiring skill and agil-"Ah! that is saying a great deal. Can you give me an evidence of your in smiling precision before him. Pedro was delighted; the engagement was soon concluded at a very small weekly stipend, the brothers saying: "Pay us what you please; you must decide that."

From the advent of those two unknown (for no one knew their real names they simply styled themselved the sense of the princes of th and Dock) good fortune seemed to smile

on this traveling show. In truth, it was impossible to imagine anything more graceful and daring than these young acrobats. whether suspended from the trapeze, flying through the air, or leaping and vaulting in the most wonderful manner—they seemed as one body animated by one will; then with incomparable grace they would light on their feet, and, hand in hand, receive the plaudits of the delighted crowd, while golden louis, bouquets and billets-doux, thrown by dainty hands, would fall in the sawdust ring. But these per-fumed billets never had the honor of being opened—not even their seals broken—for Dick and Dock seemed utterly oblivious to blondes or brunettes, and when not in the arena, were always studying their profession or practicing new feats of strength and agility.

Nevertheless, they were good comrades with Jeannot, the clown; with the cannon-ball man and with the colossal fat woman, who was no other than madame Pedro herself. Amid all this Dock. Very cold and correct they silently received her coquetries, never showing the least familiarity to the daughter of their patron.

Time rolled on, and gold rolled into the coffers of Pedra. He was growing rich, and often wondered at the indifference of Dick and Dock, who had never asked for an increase of salary. This mercenary spaniard, Pedro, could understand why a man would toil for profit or position, but to work for little or noting was unnatural—there must be something behind it.

Suddenly a thought struck him. They were striving to establish a reputation, and would then set up a business for themselves. He must retain these valuable assistants by a bond not easily broken. "I will give them my daughter Nita. Sapriste! she can only marry one of them; which shall it be? Dick is stronger than Dock, but Dock is more agile and graceful."

Then Pedro took a decided resolution and laid his dilemma before the brothers. Which one of you will marry my little Nita?" Dick and Dock exchanged looks, then one of them said: 'In ten days we will answer you."- "Ah, yes," confirmed the other; "in ten days." "That's all right," said Pedro. "After the balloon ascension; I understand." Pedro had arranged with an aeronaut for a balloon ascension, a trapeze to be attached to the car, on which the brothers would perform their wonderful feats five hundred meters above the earth. Naturally, they wished to wait until after this perilous adventure before they perfect sea of faces—the baloon on the centre swaying like a bird trying her wings. Wild shouts of enthusiasm as Nita appeared in her gold-spangled costume, dexterously driving the chariot containing the two brothers. She was more beautiful and coquettish than ever in her rose-colored gauze—perhaps in contrast to Dick and Dock, who were dressed in black velvet, lightly touched with silver lace—rather a funeral cos-tume for such a festive occasion, but probably chosen because they would be more clearly outlined on the bright blue

Leaping to the ground, the brothers gracefully salute the crowd; then, turning to Nita, they kneel before her and gracefully kiss her hand—something they had never done before.

The aeronant mounts his car, followed by the two brave acrobats. "Let her loose!" A moment's silence—then deafening shouts of enthusiasm as the Dick was the first to speak.

"You love Nita?" "Yes, and you-" "Love her and cannot give her up."
"And I will not," answered Dock. Then fate must decide—the survivor will take her."

They step back the length of the trapeze—a knife clasped in their right hands-and in bitter anguish gaze upon each other, utterly careless of the wind that swayed the trapeze back and forth, of the yawning gulf below. Then, with panting breath and gleaming eyes, they rush upon each other, still clinging to the bar that bends beneath their weight; a frightful struggle ensues; cheer after cheer from the admiring crowd, Nita wildly applauding with the others.

Then they stand motionless for a moment, when, by a sudden movement. Dick makes Dock lose his hold and fall back on the trapeze. Bending over him. he says: "Will you give up Nita?"—
"Never!" He buries his knife in his brother's throat, the hot blood spurting

With a wild maniac laugh, he rises up and leaps into space, falling a crushed and helpless mass on a distant roof; the dead body of his brother convulsively clinging to the trapeze, floating in the blue sky while the aeronant, who had seen nothing of this terrible tragedy, still waves his gayly-colored flags.

A DUMB PRINCESS.

Once upon a time there lived a king who had an immense garden. Its paths were strewn with gayly colored sand, in the niches of its yew tree hedge stood white marble statues, and strange flowers of burning colors surrounded the grass plats. But in the middle of the garden was a pond, in the center of which was a group of fish tailed sea gods, who, sitting upon spouting dolphins, were blowing their shell trum-

The princess had long recovered from her fright. She could eat and drink, but no word passed her lips. She had lost the power of speech. Physicians came to her side. They caused all the circumstances to be told them, put their heads together and wrote long prescriptions. The patient swallowed obediently drops, pills and powders, but the power of speech did

The whole court was draped in mouring. But the old king, who was usually so mild and kind, foamed with rage. He ordered all the frogs in his kingdom to be killed and set a price of a farthing on the head of every frog. But he threw the gardener into prison. Of what use was it all? The princes remained down

When she heard what had happened to her son, she tied up her bundle and wandered off to the king's town. When she arrived there, she betook herself to the prison and implored the turnkey with such moving words that he at last led her into the prison.

The mother and son remained alone together for half an hour. Then the old woman hobbled off. But when the warder brought his jug of water to the young man he was walking about his cell, with his head high, whistling a wext day he demanded to be taken before the king. He claimed that he possessed the remedy which would restore the power of speech to the princess.

The princess had been obliged that same day to undergo a great deal. First she had been pricked with redhot needles by a foreign doctor. At this she had groaned and sobbed, but not a word had she spoken. After that she had been given, at the advice of an old herb doctor, the heart, brain and tongue of a magpie, and this was also quite useless. Now the princess was lying, pale and languid, on a couch, so exhausted that she had closed her eyes. They brought the gardener to her side. His chains were clanking, but he walked erect and seemed in good spirits. "Try your arts," said the king, "and if you can cure her you shall receive the order of the Green Crocodile and as much gold as you can carry.' The gardener went to the invalid's couch, made her sit up, which she did willingly, took her little white hand in his and gazed into her tired eyes.

"Poor little princess," he then said. "So unhappy and only one and twenty years old. Then a slight blush covered the princess' countenance, her bosom rose and fell painfully, and from her lips burst the words "Not yet!" The power of speech had returned to

It was true. Milo Menard, full of whim and caprice, had taken his own ing in the homestead, and she was a measure for preserving his own property; and all the clue which he had chosen to furnish as to the whereabouts of his not inconsiderable savings was the decree that his grand-daughter should marry no one but a blacksmith.

who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia, and diseases of the general nervous system. It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumption remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous de-CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86. REBECCA WILKINSON, of Brownsvalley, Ind.,

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887. My daughter, eleven years old, was severely a ticted with St. Vitus' Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus' Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, and for all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health, from whatever cause. The Great South American Nervine Tonic Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the one and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic. HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says:
