MOON-FLOWER BELLE.

"Perfectly happy! Well, I am perfectly happy. I go where I will, I do as I will, and I have not a wish ungranted." "Then, my dear, you have never been "No; that pleasure is yet to come. "You think it will be a pleasure?"

"If the right man comes." "It could not be a pleasure otherwise; but I see my uncle coming to claim me for a walk, so you will excuse me if I go to meet him.

"Certainly, my dear. Perfectly lovely, as well as perfectly happy," said the general's widow, as she turned again towards the group of ladies who had been listening to a discussion between herself and the most beautiful debutante of the season on the conditions of happiness. "Yes," sighed a plain-looking little woman in an unbecoming brown gown, "it is easy to be happy, and even beautiful, in such costumes. "But," interrupted the General's widow, "Miss Townsand is one of those women who would look well even in shabby gray alpaca at high noon on a bright day. There would be a sweep to the skirt and a set to the waist that would be impossible to define or imitate. She is a born dresser, but I am wondering how long she will be able to declare herself perfectly happy."

"She does not know what happiness is, if, as she says, she has never been in love," chimed in a bride of three months. at which the little circle laughed, and the General's widow suggested that they move their seats to where they could have a better view of the main entrance, as it was time for the through train from the north to arrive, and it had been whispered that a Scotch Laird of high degree, an English Duke, and a well known journalist were expected—the Englishman to join the exploring party, the journalist to do the season for a syndicate, and the Scotch Laird—well all sorts of rumors. Scotch Laird-well, all sorts of rumors were afloat cencerning him. One was that he dressed in kilts, and was followed by a Highlander in custume also.

"Did you ever see so many pretty girls?" said the General's widow, as she surveyed the merry crowd that filled the hallways, stairs, and main entrance of one of Florida's splendid hotels.
"And Constance Townsand is quite the handsomest there. And the General's widow was right. Tall and most divinely fair, in a gown of softest white silk, she reminded one of the royal moon flowers, a great bunch of which she held in her hand. They were her chosen flower, and by them she had become known as the moon-"That girl understands effects perfectly," thought the General's widow, as she watched her quietly and apparently without intention seat herself in an old-fashioned high-back chair that stood just at the foot of the stairway, and over which a graceful palm spread its dark green leaves.

There had been quite a discussion between the General's widow, the little lady in brown, and the bride as to how the Laird, the Duke, and the writer would act when they first saw Miss Towsand, for the three women had watched with a growing interest the sensations she never failed to produce, until they had begun to have a sense of proprietorship in the girl's radiant beau ty, and would have bitterly resented any criticism the least bit unfavorable. That Miss Townsand deserved their admiration was certain, and that she never failed to be in the entrance hall when the evening coaches arrived, faultlessly gowned in white, and carrying her favorite flower, was also certain, so that the three women were sure on this particular evening of enjoying the little tableau they had mentally arranged.

The Englishman did just what the General's widow expected he would; he stopped in the very act of greeting a friend, readjusted his glasses, and after taking a good look, exclaimed "Stunning, do you know—stunning!"

The writer, the bride had declared, would run his hands through his raven locks—no auburn, no sunlight locks—call her a goddess, and end in writing verses to her. As it happened, he caught sight of her as he looked up from reading a telegram recalling him to other and less arduous duties than writing verses to the belle of the season would have been. And his locks were brown and ent short he did not go through the and cut short, he did not go through the running act, althoug it did take him a long time to read the telegram, as over it he watched the beautiful girl smiling and chatting to those about her. Then turning to the clerk at the desk, he "Who is the lady in white with the moon-flowers?" "Miss Townsand of Texas, niece of Major Townsand, the richest cattle-man in the country. Been here two weeks; going to stay two more," answered the authority behind the desk, in a I-knew-you-would-ask-it tone of voice, never once raising his eyes from the book over which he was bending.

"Thank you, Mr. Cash; you would make a tip-top paragrapher."
"That's all right, old man; when you want an introduction to the Major, I will gladly arrange it for you."
As for the Scotch Laird, he did not appear, thereby disappointing the little lady in brown, who had been his cham-pion from the first, declaring that he would be the one to woo and win.
"My dear, he and his kilts have been bribed into staying elsewhere as attractions," said the General's widow, who disliked Scotchmen.

"No such thing; he is probably so shy or late that he has come in by a side entrance. I am going to look at the register as soon as that telegraph-reader But before she could carry out her intentions a young man in a plain brown sweet confusion at her feet. Archey-why, Cousin Archey! "Con-why, Cousin Con!" he answered, as they clasped hands.

The bride smiled, and whispered something to the general's widow, who an-

"Yes the right man has arrived,"

The college phrase, "not in it," is not new, as many would suppose, but was used by Euripides, more than two thousand years ago, in his "Meleager," when he says: "Cowards do not count in battle; they are there, but not in it.'
