IN THE HOP FIELDS.

Hop-picking was always a gala time at Pendexter farm. Far away the golden haze hung over the hills like a quivering vail; the bland air was full of the soft, subtle fragrance of wild grapes ripening in the woods; and wherever dead tree or rude stone wall afforded it a vantage ground, the silvery tangles of clematis wove a lovely garland, and tall masses of golden-rod and purple-fringed asters held up their clusters of dazzling bloom. And in the hop fields merry voices echoed from morning until night. Will Pendexter, walking up and down the isles of silver-green leafage, with his hinds behind his back, might have reminded one of Boaz in the ancient Scripture story—princely Boas standing in his harvest fields and giving a kind glance and pleasant word to everyone. "Isn't he handsome?" said little Fanny Dix to Miss Morgan, the rector's daughter. Fanny was a pale little dressmaker, with an incipient cough, who had been recommended by her doctor to spend a fortnight in the hop fields; and Miss Morgan, whose mother had died of consumption, picked hops every year on principle, just as Judge Marley's daughters visited Long Branch. "And all the handsomer since he has turned gray? I do wonder why he never mar-

Don't you know?" said Miss Morgan, "I can tell you then," said the rector's daughter, who dearly loved a morsel of genuine romance. "Because his first

"As if anyone would jilt Will Pendexter," said incredulous Fanny. "Oh, but he wasn't Squire Pendexter then—all this happened twenty years ago," averred Miss Morgan, her flying fingers never leaving off among the clusters of pale-green hops. "That was before he inherited Pendexter farm. He was only a poor young farmer then, with his own living to make, and this was a beautiful girl who was spending the summer here. And they were engaged and all—and the very night before the wedding she ran away with an Italian, one Count Caprivi, who was on the New York stage.

"And what became of them," said "Oh, they went to Italy where the count expected to succeed to large estates, and I suppose they are there Fanny drew a long breath.

Fanny looked with secret awe at the ruddy face and magnificent height of her baby in the off-hand, ordinary lan-guage of every day life, and give lame Billy Bartlett "good day," just as if there had been no Countess Caprivi in the world.

But Fanny Dix was but a girl yet; she did not know how twenty years will bridge over the darkest gulf in a human life. There is no scar that will not heal in twenty years—there is not a grave on which grass will not grow—aye, and daisies bloom, in twenty years.
"I don't know that we can take another hand, Simpson," said Squire Pendexter, meditatively. "The field is crowded already.'

"What I though, exactly, sir," said the overseer, respectfully. "But this 'ere is a pretty young slip of a girl, with rubbing the gold knob of his walking

"Mother, don't fret; here comes the gentleman now," said a clear, self-toned voice, and Squire Pendexter found himself looking into a pair of wistful, deep-blue orbs—orbs that belonged to a slight, peantiful girl dressed in faded fabric and worn shoes, who was leaning against the well-curb. For while Simpson had been gone on his errand of in-luiry, she had drawn a bucket of clear, cold water out of the sparkling depths of the well and given her mother a drink out of the silver-bound gourd which always hung there. "Sir," without a moment's hesitation, "might I have a job of work in your nop fields? We have come from the city -mother and I—there's no living to be picked up there, and my mother is ailing, and we thought the smell of the hops might do her good. Please, sir, we'd work cheap, if only we might sleep in the barn and have a bit of something to eat between whiles!"

"I don't want you to work cheap! said the squire, assuming an aspect of unwonted gruffness to cover the sym-pathetic thrill in his voice. "I never grudged money's worth for good, honest work. As for the barn, my housekeeper can put you in one of the vacant back chambers over the kitchen, and there's always enough to eat at Pendexter farm!"

"Pendexter farm!" The woman, who had been sitting on the mossy cattle trough, slowly lifted her head here and pushed back her worn "Where are we, Isora? Whither have we come? I knew a man named Pendexter once, who-" "Yes," said she squire, who had given a little start at the first sound of that low contralto voice. "It was I, Clara Caprivi! To think that fate should have brought us together again after all these The pale woman struggled to her feet and clutched at her daughter's slim,

"Let us go, Isora," said she. "Wewe have made a mistake. Give me my shawl. Quick! Let us go!" "But, mother, why?" soothed the girl, who scarcely, as yet, comprehended all this by-play. "Don't you hear what the gentleman says? We can have work here and food and shelter! Mother, sit lown again! You are trembling all "I tell you, child, you don't know!" said impatient Clara, possessed with a self, and was killed in a gambling brawl how she had struggled on for years, constantly feeling herself less able to wage unequal warfare with the world. "Clara," said the squire, when she had finished, "why didn't you come to me?"

"Because I had wronged you so deeply," she falterel. "You might have known I would have been kind, even to Caprivi's child Well, it doesn't matter now. You are here, and you must stay here. Do you hear me, Clara? Must! Bless my heart! You'll grow stronger in these country breezes, and that pale girl of yours will get a color in her face."

So they stayed at the Pendexter farm. and beautiful Isora Caprivi grew fairer to look upon with every passing 'Clara," said the blunt squire one day. "that girl of yours is prettier than ever you were.

"I know it," said Madam Caprivi. And as she spoke the words a pang of And as she spoke the words a pang of jealousy struck sharply through her heart. "Ask it, then, freely," said she gra-"Should I be making a fool of myself if, at my age. I were to marry?" "You would be doing the most proper and natural thing in the world," Clara answered, still smiling, although her heart seemed to stand still within her. "Then, by Jove, I'll risk it!" said the squire, jubiliantly. "Clara. will you have me? Shall we begin our disjointed ives over again, my girl?" Madam Caprivi grew pale, then red.

"Halloo!" said Squire Pendexter. Have I spoken too abruptly! Have "No," said Clara, faintly. "But-but I thought it was Isora that you 'Then you thought wrong." said the squire, briskly "I have never loved any woman but you, Clara, and never

But I overcame my repugnance and mounted one, after receiving careful instructions how to retain my seat while the brute was getting up. It was well enough while he walked, but when he began to trot at a brisk pace I devoutly wished myself Will Pendexter, as he sauntered down astride on a humbler animal. But how the green aisles of waving tendrils and tremulous leaves, and almost wondered to hear him ask Mahala Bentley about was I to stop him? There was no bridle, only a rope attached to the left side of the brute's mouth. At that rope I tugzed, with the effect merely of making my camel trot to the left. I had been told that if I wished to make him go to the right I must hit him on the left side of the head with a very short stick, with which I had been provided for the purpose. But that was more easily said than done. How was I, from my giddy perch, to reach the creature's head across that long stretch of neck? Itried it and nearly lost my balance for my pains—no joke at the height of some ten feet above the publy sand. One of the officers, however, saw my plignt, stop ped, uttered some gurling sounds, and then the camel, exposing its teeth and protesting vigorously, knelt down and I dismounted, vowing that never again would I chose that mode of locomotion. a feeble mother dragging along on her arm.
