Stamping Notes. [From the Monetary Times.] The subject of stamping bills and notes is one about which business men are very careless. So long as they feel satisfied that it will, in most cases, make no practical difference when or by whom the stamps are affixed, they take no trouble to enquire what the requirements of the law are. We are naturally prone to think that so long as the revenue is not defrauded, it matters little whether the formalities re- jealousy of the powerful Chief, Kreli, in quired by statute are complied with. But | the Transkei, South Africa, of a near rethe law is very jealous of its forms, and lative by marriage, as being too much unmost exacting in enforcing a rigid perform- | der the influence of the authorities of the part of the revenue enactments. But the and if he perseveres, he will, probably, in actual loss is no criterion of the extent to which irregularities really exist. In the vast majority of business transactions paper is paid at or shortly after maturity in good faith, and neither maker nor holder ever gives a thought to the teach business men that sufficient care is not taken to comply with the law. It is not long since one of our Canadian banks made a considerable loss through an irregularity in stamping some customers' paper whereby an endorser was held to be released. In that case the note, endorsed, but not filled in, was handed by the customers to the bank's agent, who sometime afterwards filled it in for the amount of the customers' indebtedness and affixed double stamps, which were then cancelled with the date at which the note was thus completed. The note, however, bore date the day it had first been deposited in the bank. It will probably surprise those who have been in the habit of thinking that double stamping cures all defects, to learn that it was held by the Court of Common Pleas that the bank could not recover against the endorser. The first ground on which it was sought to uphold this stamping, was that the stamps were affixed by the bank as agents for the maker; but it was decided that it was not regular in that view, as the date on the stamps was different from that of the note. Next it was contended that as the note had been double stamped by the bank as soon as it became a perfect instrument, the law had in this respect been complied with and all defects remov-This contention also was overruled by the Court on the ground that to make a double stamping regular, the stamps should have written on them not only the date of the cancellation but the name or initials of the holder as well.

When banks make such mistakes, and as a consequence lose their claims, and in addition lay themselves open to a penalty of five hundred dollars, we need not perhaps wonder that private individuals sometimes commit similar errors. Let us look for a moment at the way in which this matter is usually attended to. Every one knows that nothing is more common than for notes to come to the hands of payees unstamped. In many instances stamps to the ordinary amount are then affixed and cancelled. But often even this is not done. Many houses make it a rule never to stamp a note until it is being put into the bank, or by some one with his authority. To constitute a regular stamping in the

of the proper denomination shall be affixed and cancelled by the maker or some one on his behalf at the time the instrument is made. The cancellation in this case may be in any one of several ways. 1st, by writing upon the stamps the signature, or some part of the signature, or the initials of the maker. 2nd, by writing some integral or material part of the instrument so as (as far as practical) to identify each stamp with the instrument to which it is attached. 3rd, by writing or stamping upon the adhesive stamp the date at which it is affixed, which must be done at the time of affixing it. This last is the mode usually adopted, though perhaps not always the most safe one, because the statute further provides that a note shall be considered as improperly stamped if the date on the stamp does not correspond with the date of the note. Hence it seems plain that if a note chance to be unsigned until after the day of its date it cannot by this mode be regularly cancelled at all, since on the one hand it must be cancelled when the instrument is made, and with the date at which it is made; and on the other hand this date must correspond with the date of the instrument. The same objection does not seem to apply to an obliteration by either of the other modes specified by the statute. Of the three, the first, that is by writing across the stamp the name or initials of the maker, would appear to be at once the most safe and the most simple. It is, no doubt, annoying to an ordinary man of business to have to keep a constant watch that none of these minutiæ are overlooked, but a knowledge of the requirements of the law in this particular respect, once acquired is easily remembered, and habit would soon make it easy to see that they were complied with. When it is remembered that severe penalties are attached to each breach of these laws, in addition to the instrument being made void, the risks that are constantly run become evident. It is foolhardy for those, at least, whose business involves a daily handling of negotiable securities, to disregard the forms imposed for the collection of revenue

GERMANY AND BELGIUM. - The Pall Mall Gazette, in a recent article, says Germany is urging Belgium to accept a German protectorate, and make her military system conform to that of Germany, in return for a German guarantee of Belgium's independence in all other respects, and for territorial compensation. France might have something to say in the matter however, and probably England, as two of the

The privilege of affixing double duty and thereby remedying defects, though a valuable one, is not quite so broad as is sometimes supposed. To be effectual, it should be done as soon as the holder acquires knowledge of the want of stamps, or of the defective stamping in the first instance. Another peculiarity of double stamping is that there is only one regular way of cancelling the stamps, and that is by writing > Commodore Vanderbilt left about $100, 000,000 worth of property, all with the exception of about five millions, being given to his son William H. Some of the heirs are now contesting the will, the case commencing last Thursday. As in all such cases the trial threatens to rub a good deal of the moral gilding off the venerable deceased. The Plaintiffs' Counsel in his opening address, made some curious state. ments as to the private life of the testator. "The Commodore sent his first wife to an insane asylum, because she protested against his intimacy with their governess. William H. endeavored to control his father through woman's influence. The Commodore's mind was weakened by vice and disease, and he had not proper testamentary capacity, and was unduly influenced by William H. in making his will, and that William H. poisoned his father's mind against Cornelius J., and entered into a conspiracy against him. By arrangement between the second Mrs. Vanderbilt and William H. the latter's brother and sisters were denied access to their father when on his sick bed." Daniel B. Allen, one of the Commodore's sons-in-law, testified at considerable length in regard to the Commodore's treatment of his wife and children. Such are the allegations made by counsel in this case.
