Rive & Co. and, further on, the store and residence of the Hon. R. Young (who has also, like others, a branch at Shippegan) with scattered dwellings between. The general aspect is not unlike that of an English fishing village, Caraquette being one of the prettiest places on the route. and with a railway along the coast might,

Caraquette is said to employ a fleet of These boats are mostly clinker built, of boats, the material of which is hacmatac. There was good fishing this year until gallon of oil per quintal, this would give ies and abounds in cod, mackerel, salmon, equal to that of Canso herrings. The dry August and September is stated to be fish is mostly shipped to the West India market. The season for cod is from May to October, and from the 15th of August till October there is good mackerel lishing which the fishermen along the coast are gradually going into, although hitherto it has been the custom to lie back after the cod fishing was over.

K. F. Burns Esq., M. P. P. shipped some 2,500,000 ft. of lumber this season from Caraquette.

In winter there is considerable want of employment for the fishermen, who occupy themselves in building their own boats and making the drums and casks used in shipping dry fish to the West India market.

SCHOOLS There is a superior school in charge of Mr. Wall of St. John, with Mr. Legere, who has a 3rd class license, as assistant. About two-thirds of the pupils are French. There is another School in the same district, (Caraquette Centre) and the pupils in both number about 80. There are also Schools in several other districts.

About a mile from the business centre along the main road is the Roman Catholic Church, a handsome edifice of stone with a wooden tower and spire, which was built by the Rev. Mr. Pacquet. It is capable of seating 2000 people and hard by is the Convent, and residence occupied by the Rev. J. L. Allard, Parish Priest. There is also a Protestant Church in which the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Episcopalians worship.

TELEGRAPH LINE. In order to get a telegraph line along he coast between Bathurst, Tracadie and Shippegan, some 70 miles, it was agreed to furnish the company with the poles, upon which they agreed to erect the line ; the operator receiving half the profit.

A HANDSOME BEECH GROVE. About a mile outside Caraquette towards Grand Anse, the traveller comes upon the old burial ground of Caraquette and the present representative of the old Roman Catholic Church, in a small picturesque wooden chapel, which might remind one of that of William Tell, the site being close to the waters of the harbor, and sheltered by a magnificent grove of beeches.

At the head of the harbor are the well known oyster beds of Caraquette, from which at present, far less oysters are taken than formerly.

ON THE ROAD TO GRAND ANSE, some half dozen miles from Caraquette, is Caraquette bridge, crossing the stream of that name. Here K. F. Burns, Esq., M. P. P., has a shipping station for lumber. which is floated down from his mill some six miles distant. At the time of our visit to Caraquette harbor, the Beacon field. a vessel of 700 tons was loading lumber from this mill. On the other side of the bridge commences the long portage of 6 miles through the woods. The weather was cold and the wind blowing a gale, and during the last two miles the waters of the Bay of Chaleur lashed into foam. were to be seen through the long vistas of woods. On emerging on the main road at the lower part of Grand Anse the spray was flying over the pastures at a great rate, and it was very evident that Grand Anse was enjoying a "snorter" probably for the benefit of its Breakwater.

GRAND ANSE. The settlement of Grand Anse lines the main road for about 3 miles; the lower portion near the portage is principally occupied by settlers of Irish extraction, and the upper portion by French. There is a large Roman Catholic Church, and schoolhouse, the parish being in charge of the Rev. Joseph R. Doucett. The upper part of the village deserts the main road, which descends through the woods, and keeps the level ground above for about a mile on a parallel road. Here are some neat residences of those engaged in the fishing business, of which there are four merchants. The catch at Grand Anse this season was about 200 quintals and there

THE BREAKWATER. The breakwater at Grand Anse at present does not make much show, as there is yet only one block of 100 feet in position, the result of the work resumed in August last, a fter the unsuccessful attempt to float it in '75. which result-All wept the early stricken flower, and burst from timber as could be collected was saved by Mr. Timothy Coughlan, foreman of the work, by whom the block was rebuilt, ballasted and floated to its position, where it now remains apparently firm as a rock. though looking somewhat isolated, and not particularly like a breakwater, which the exposed shore stands much in need of, as the fishing boats have hitherto been almost devoid of shelter. On the shore there is another section of 100 feet, built of square timber, which will have to be taken apart and reconstructed at the water's edge before it can be launched next season; $5,000 has been appropriated for the work. which will only complete the section ready to be launched, but more will be required

Messrs Geo, Smith & Co. of Pathurst are erecting buildings on the end of the portage, about a mile from Grand Anse for a lobster establishment. The Buildings, four in number, will include a house for the manager, and their dimensions are 20x18 ft., 50x22 ft., 16x22 ft., 40x22 ft. The establishment will include a large Boss freezer, the peculiar construction of which we shall hereafter refer to.

At Pokeshaw there is a new Schoolhouse nearly completed which will be ready in ANOTHER LOBSTER ESTABLISHMENT. At Pokeshaw bridge we came upon an old resident of Chatham, Mr. H. Duff. who has a lobster establishment here, on property formerly owned by F. E. Winslow, Esq., the main building of which is 60 x 30 ft, and some three stories high. It is situated in a small cove, and though the sea is very rough here in the fall, there is good shelter for boats. Mr. Duff was preparing to take his flight for the season. He stated he had put up about 1,000 boxes. containing, 48,000 cans, but the rough weather had somewhat interfered with operations.
