THE FIGHTING AT PLEVNA.

It has been said that nobody ever saw with the passions of the fight as well as only the correspondent who is daring thunder of artillery. Here is what I him.

every instant leaped forth globes of flam. There were moments when these flashes seemed to light up everything around them. Then the guns and gunners appeared for an instant with fearful distinctness, red and lurid, as though tinged with blood. Then they san's back again in shadowy indistinct-ness. The uproar of the battle rose and swelled until it became fearful to hear -like the continuous roar of an angry sea beating against a rock-bound coast, combined with that of a thunder-storm, with the strange unearthly sounds heard on board a ship when laboring in a This terrible storm of battle continued without ceasing for nearly two hours. The Russian guns were pouring their fire into the redoubt, and the Russian infantry into the trenches, while the attacking columns were advancing caution ly under cover of the smoke and fog and standing corn to get a position as near as possible before making the final rush. At about five o'clock the smoke lifted again, carried away by a gust of wind. At this moment I saw before the redoubt, down near Plevna, a mass of Russian soldiers rise up in a field of Indian corn, and push forward with a shout. The Turkish fire just then seemed to have been dominated, nearly silenced by the terrible storm of shot and shell poured in by the Russian. The moment seemed favourable for the assault. Either the Turks were abandoning these redoubts or they were lying behind the parapet awaiting the attack. Which was it? we asked. The question was soon answered. The Russian shout had scarcely died away when there flashed along the parapet of the redoubt a stream of fire that swayed backwards and forwards like a current of electricity, while the smoke rose over the redoubt in one heavy white mass. One continuous erash filled the air with bullets, from which to the spectator looking on it did not seem possible for even a rabbit to escape. Into this storm of bullets plunged the Russians with a shout as though of joy an I then disappeared into a little hollow, and for the moment were lost to view. Then they emerged again, disappeared in the low ground at the foot of the glacis, rushing on as though the bullets were but paper pellets, but, alas! sadly diminished in number. Would it be possible for them to reach the parapet? Was it possible for flesh and blood to break that circle of fire? To me it seemed utterly out of the question. Did but one bullet in ten find its billet. not one of these gallant fellows would return through that corn field. While waiting to see them emerge from this little hollow my excitement was so great, my hand trembled so, that I could not hold the field-glass to my eyes, and for the moment was obliged to trust my naked vision. They were evidently very near the redoubt. A rush might do it. Victory was almost within their grasp, but they required a fresh accession of strength; a rush of new men from behind; another wave coming forward with new impetus to carry the first up over the glacis; a second wave, and perhaps a third, each bringing new impulsion, new strength. I looked for this wave of reserves. I looked to see if reinforcements were coming up-if the general was doing anything to help the gallant fellows, struggling there against that circle of fire. I looked in vain. My heart sank within me, for I saw that all this bravery, all this loss of life. would be useless. While these poor away by hundreds in a desperate struggle, when the victory was trembling in the balance, not a man was sent to help them. They were left to die overwhelmstruggle up the glacis one by one. They drop. They are not followed, and here they come again, a confused mass of human beings rushing madly back across that corn field, less than half of those that went forward. When this disorderly remnant was seen flying back, broken, destroyed, two more battalions them back to the assault. Two more battalions! They might as well have sent a corporal and two more men.-Two more regiments were what was required, and they should have been sent at the moment when that mass of men rose up in the corn field, and went on with a cheer. The new troops would have reached the glacis just as the assault began to waver, would have carried the hesitating mass onward, and all to carry such positions, to follow up the would have gone into the redoubt together. Instead of this, General Kriloff sent two battalions, and that when it was too late. The poor fellows went and four battalions of sharpshooters. Still keeping up his murderous fire he formed under its cover two regiments the Vladimirski and the Zoozolski, in the little hollow at the foot of the low hill on which was built the redoubt, together with two battalions of sharpshooters, not more than twelve hundred yards from the searp. Then placing himself in the best position for watching the result, he ceased fire and ordered the advance. He ordered the assaulting party not to fire, and they rushed forward with their guns on their shoulders, with music playing and banners flying, and disappeared in the fog and smoke. Skobeloff is the only general who places himself near enough to feel the pulse of a battle. The advancing column was indistinctly seen, a dark mass in the fog and smoke. Feeling, as it were, every throb of the battle, he saw this line begin to waver and hesitate. Upon the instant he hurled forward a rival regiment to support, and again watched the result. This new force carried the mass further on with its momentum, but the Turkish redoubt flamed and smoked, and poured forth such a torrent of bullets that the line was again shaken. Skobeloff stood in this shower of balls unhurt. All his escort were killed or wounded, even to the little Kirghiz, who received a bullet in the shoulder. Again he saw the line hesitate and waver, and he flung his fourth and last regiment, the Libausky. on the glacis. Again this new wave carried the preceding ones forward, until they were almost on the scarp; but that deadly shower of bullets poured upon them; men dropped by hundreds, and the result still remained doubtful. The line once more wavered be lost, if the redoubt was to be carried. Skobeloff had now only two battalions of sharpshooters left, the best in his detachments. Putting himself at the head of these, he dashed forward on horseback. He picked up the stragglers; he reached the wavering, fluctuating mass, and gave it the inspiration of his own courage and instruction. He picked the whole mass up and carried it forward with a rush and a cheer. The whole redoubt was a mass of flame and smoke, from which screams, shouts and cries of agony and defiance arose, with the deep-mouthed bellowing of the cannon, and above all the steady, awful

General Levitsky, as I have been informed, formally refus-

General Kriloff on his NORTHROP & LYMAN, Teronto, Wholesale own responsibility sent the remnant of a regiment which had attacked the redoubt, which I saw rush forward and back through that Indian corn-field. Of the 2.500 there was barely 1,000 left, so it was utterly incapable of going into action that day, and even this regiment arrived too late. General Skobeloff had left the redoubt at 4 o'clock to go to his tent on the woody hill opposite. He had not been there scarcely an hour when he was informed that the Turks were again attacking the right flank on AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, the Lovtcha road immediately above Pievna. He galloped forward to see, and was met by an orderly with the news that the Turks were again attacking the redoubt a sixth time. He dashed forward towards the redoubt in hopes astream of his own men flying back. He said, "I have done my best; I could do no more. My detachment is half descroyed; my regiments do not exist; I have no officers left; they sent me no reinforcements, and I have lost three guns." They were three of the four guns which he placed in the redoubt upon taking it, only one of which his retreating troops had been able to carry off. "Why did they refuse you reinforcements?" I asked. "Who was to blame?" "I blame nobody," he replied, "it was the will of

MR. T. J. B. HARDING. Mr. T. J. B. HARDING.

DEAR SIR,—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your Constitutional Catarre Remedy, Iwish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 29 years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure head earth continued labor savel. able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Kemedy. Yours truly, Price $1 per bottle.

ASK FOR LITTLEF.ELD'S CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRELEMEDY AND TAKE NO OTHER.
