The Haunted Hulk; or, the Wreck on the Spanish Main,

BY GEO. MANVILLE FENN. The girl had run into the shelter of the trees, and as we joined her, she made a sign to ensure silence; and then, in a she had heard paddles. And sure enough, at the end of minute, we saw a canoe, paddled by two men, come into sight, and one of its occupants stood up and began to scan the shore with his hand shading his eyes.

"Is that the man ?" Bill whispered to the girl and she shivered and clung closer to him, as she nodded quickly. I saw Bill's face grow very black and angry as he knelt under cover watching the man in the boat till he had passed on out of sight, and then we rose and made our way back towards our vessel.

For we had no leave to be away, and wished to avoid trouble if we could .-What Bill meant to do in the future I could not say: but for my part, gold or no gold, I felt as if it would take a very strong pull to get me to the side of he came. that hulk again by night, after what I

Now, all the'time I was at work there, thinking about what we had seen the night before, and Bill looked so quiet, that I could see he was thinking about it too; but I was not so deep on that as not to be able to notice something else, so that I was not a bit surprised when Bill said to me suddenly," Jack Harris, just cast your weather eye ashore, by them logs, and tell me if you see any thing." | more.

I gave a squint in the direction he meant, and then said, " No, I can't see any thing."

"Nothing?" he said, curiously "Only that Indian chap who's been watching us all day long, if you mean

Yes, "he said, taking a pull at a rope," I do mean him. But don't take any notice so as to seem to be watching him. That's the Indian who's always running after my little Tezela, and she hates

"Ho!" Isaid. "Bit jealousy, then?" "I suppose so," he said. I wouldn't go on shore at night then, Bill," I says. "Why not?" " Because Englishmen are jealous with their tongues, and when they are very jealous, it's with their fists." " Well ?" "But these Indian chaps are jealous with a long knife, which they make a done the night before, and while we present to you, and shelter it in your sipped the drop of rum-and-water we Worse still, just over me-for my head ribs."

I took another pull at the rope, and and then wetted my hands, and took anyou, I won't deny it, I was frightned, party of uncanny-looking, old-world and I last looking people scared me not a little.

"Well, Jack," says Bill, smiling, " you won't hang back, will you?" "If you ask my advice, Bill, old mate, what I says is, don't go; but, if you do go, Jack Harris isn,t the boy to hang back and let his messmate go alone."

"I knew you'd go, Jack," he said, sliding his feet down the rope so as to get a grip at my hand; "and look here, mate. able to overtake them afterwards. I wont be shabby over sharing. It's a I found I was right: for I had come and unlade her."

"Do you think wind would stop us, or the figures we seen in a dream, Jack?' he says, with the same quiet smile. "There, man, don,t be scared at shadows! I can,t explain it to you; but what we saw last night were only the shadows the treasure in that ship before she was crack cast away. Depend upon it, they were drowned at the time."

"And have walked that deck ever since!" I says with a bit of shiver. "Nonsense, man, there's nothing to off amongst the trees. be scared about," he said. "I'm more

> All round, too, sitting and standing about, were the Spanish crew, in the midst of the pale glow, which had now grown quite bright, and I could see that everyone had his eyes fixed on me in the same terrible stare as their lead-

> I tried to call to my mate, but my tongue stuck to the roof of my mouth, and I could not move hand or foot, while to my horror, there was Bill still mixed up like with the great Spaniard, digging through him and passing the shovel through his back or legs at every

> All at once Bill stood straight up, and I felt now that he must see all that I did; but a terrible cry from the sands made him drop the shovel and bound to

"Here, quick, Jack, help!" he shouted, as he flung himself down from the ship, falling heavily on the sand, while I, in a strange heavy way, as if my legs were of lead, dragged myself after him. I don't know how I got down from that horrible hulk, only that I half rolled, half fell, and then, gathering myself up, staggered after Bill to the tree where we had left the little Indian girl, and where it seemed to me a struggle was I heard a wild cry, and what sounded like a blow and a smothered groan. The next moment some one leaped at me, and I seemed to see a thousand stars, as I was dashed down on the sands, where, in a confused, dim way, I seemed to hear cries and shrieks, and then all was blank. When I came to, it was to find Bill leaning over me, with his face all cut and bloody, and he was splashing water

"Where's---" I didn't finish what I was going to say, for I had felt what had happened -that the Indian had followed us up, "Only some kind of a wild cat track- and, after cutting us down, carried off me short by pointing into the woods. "Back to the ship," he said faintly; and getting his arm under mine, after one shuddering look at the hulk, I help-

"Let's get away-farther away, Jack," he whispered, and we struggled on again, a bit at a time, till we reached the spring, where I laid him down on the leaves, and bathed his face, and made him drink out of a big leaf.

That revived him for a bit; but I could see a change in his face that told me what was coming.

"Jack," he said at last, "come back some day, and get the gold. I leave it all to you, and if you see my poor girl again, tell her I loved her very true, and she should have been my wife." I didn't make him any promise, for no sooner had he said that than he gave

The next day there was a fine trouble on, for the skipper threatened to burn the village if the man who killed Bill "We shall soon get to something was not hung; and this roused the Indians, who came down to fight, and the ship had to be unmoored, and we set to come and interfere with it after we've | sail in haste, with not quite a full cargo, though enough to give plenty of profit to the owners.
