The Delegate-Apostolic and the "Liberals." A correspondent of the Paris Monde

writing from Rome on the 12th September announces the result of the mission of the Delegate Apostolic as follows :-"Letters from Canada recently received at Rome bring good news of the success of the mission entrusted to Mgr. Conroy by the Holy See. In the ecclesiasti- One of the crew packs whilst the other cal Province of Quebec, visited by Mgr.

Conroy in the character of delegate apo-stolic, dissensions existed among the faithful which were all the more lamentable because they were groundless. They had for origin or pretext the name liberal, which a certain number of Canadians who are good Catholics assume or by which they are designated in purely political questions. Others, over-zealous, have taken this as a term of disparagement and applied to those who used it innocently all the condemnations the Holy See pronounc ed against the real liberals or the revolutionary party. Now, as I have said be- work, and invigorated by frequent doses fore, the name of a simple political party was alone in question, and we know that in Great Britain, as in all the British possessions, the name of liberal is used in a toiled away, singing in chorus anything sense entirely different from anywhere from Moody and Sanky to "Corn rigs and else; there it designates a political party Barley rigs." Tea is found to be the that have sinned in this very matter, also through excess of zeal or erroneous information. It is, moreover, by this distinction that Mgr. Conroy has been ruled in putting an end to the useless struggle to which I have referred. By his prudence as well as by his zeal and talent of persuasion he has known how to pacify the minds of men, dispel misunderstandings, and draw more closely around the Catholics of Canada the bonds of the most unfailing and perfect charity. It is fitting to add that in this work of pacification the The animal is generally known and may be seen at the stable of the Hon. Wm. Muirhead.

Thick or Thin Seeding. Having had a number of years' experience in the been met with demonstrating the remark- that instant they saw their brothers about the support, and the various benefits from atmospheric influence. In the cereals this extraordinary increase is from the greater number and size of the grains; by branchor stooling. By both names is the production of additional stalks from the seed or root known. The season of '77 furnishes an instance of such increase in the and Marbleized Mantels, &c., have removed with it an immense swarm of ground squir-RE prepared to fill all orders in their line, and had as thick a stand as usual. Many went to replanting the corn; others let it go just as it came up; the stand of the crop was consequently thin; but in many of these fields the stalks are of an immense growth, many of them having two ears and, in some instances, more, so that farmers have in their fields a prospect of a fine crop of corn. The dozen of hills that had the space and plant food generally

We should not, however, suffer ourselves to be influenced by such instances to seed too thin. Thicker sowing than is necessary is a waste of seed, but too thin seeding induces late ripening and a diminution of crops. Whether, taking all circumstances into consideration, a greater or less quantity of seed is better, each farmer must decide for himself. No castiron rule will suit alike every variety of soil and every degree of fertility. A good English authority gives the quantity of wheat usually sown as 100 pounds per acre. The number of seeds in one pound averages 10,000. Were all circumstances favorable to germination, it is very plain. this would cause twice too many wheat plants on any soil; but many grains of seed have been dead, some have been covered too deep, some have remained uncovered, and there is an uncertain amount of loss from water, frost, birds, and wireworms, in some soils a greater loss than in others, so that stinting the seed we look upon as on the whole bad policy. Even the strongest of liquor, however, fails to lave an apparent evil effect upon the toiling men, who ere their task-perhaps eight or ten hours duration-is done, become spangled from head to foot with the scales of their victims, till they look like strange specimens of the scaly mousters of the deep. Dirty work it is and hard. The herring are quickly conveyed to the various "yards" where they are rushed into farlands, accessible through openinings in the outer wall. Women are there prepared with fingers well clothod in defensive (which ere long become offensive) rags, and armed with a short "futtle" or gutting knife. It is remarkable how dexterous these women become in this operation. They turn the herring-according to its quality-into a tub.
