On Sunday evening last a public temperance meeting was held under the auspices of the Catholic T. A. Society of Bathurst, in the Temperance Hall. The hall was crowded to excess, notwithstanding TERMS for Mr. Burwood's course of sing. the inclement state of the weather. The chair was occupied by S. Melanson, Esq., who, in a few well chosen remarks, announced the object of the meeting, review. ing the course of the Society since its formation. Speeches were also delivered by Messrs. McManus, Lawlor, Power, Doucett and Burns. The Rev. Father Carter then took the platform, and spoke of the want long felt in the community of such a Society, and of the great amount of good done since its organization. The Rev. gentleman called upon all present to unite themselves with the Society. A large will be held in the Y. M. C. A. room this number then came forward and took the pledge. - News.

"Energy."

The lecture on "Energy" by Rev. Mr. Smith in St. John's Church on Thursday evening last was listened to by quite a large audience, and seemed to cause quite a commotion in the minds of some of his hearers anent his remarks on the Y. M. C. A. of this town. The lecturer occupied some time in a general review of his subject when applied to things mundane and those pertaining to the Christian's walk in life and then offered a subject for the practical application of his remarks in the state n which the affairs of the Association are here. From information which he had acquired, both from members and outsiders, he found that the affairs of the Society were not at all in a favorable state, that it was not able to assist in any case when help for young men was required, that the average attendance was very small indeed and that, in fact, it did not occupy such a position in the town as it should and as it was represented to hold.

The Rev'd gentleman's remarks were evidently made with a sincere desire to further the interests of the society by awakening its members to a sense of their apathy but they were not taken in this spirit by the gentleman who, we believe. Paterson, who rose to his feet at the conclusion of the lecture and made some remarks concerning Mr. Smith's statements which were, to say the least of them, in bad taste when the fact is considered that they were made by the President of the Society, at MR. Murder in Halifax.

A boy, by name Willie Dillon, was killed in Halifax a few days ago while standing in a crowd, by being struck by for steel rails a brick, thrown by a person then known. At the inquest held on the body of the murdered boy the Coroner's Jury returned a verdict that death was caused by a blow of a brick thrown by one Matthew L. Henry, a young man belonging to River John, Pictou County, who was attending the Marine School at Halifax. Henry left Halifax the next morning, and has not since been seen, SKATING COMPETITION. -The competi- nor heard of. Sergt. Power has been sent in search of him. OTTAWA, March 2. In the Commons to-day, the bill extend ing Criminal Laws to Prince Edward Island was read a third time and passed. Mr. Cartwright moved the adoption of the tariff resolutions.

Sir John A. Macdonald said the changes in the tariff were understood to be a temof the highest places in the records of this porary measure to meet a temporary exi-University have been awarded to young gency, not as a fixed policy. It was his intention hereafter to move an amendment to the tariff whereby he would be able to indicate what was believed on his side of the House to be the proper course of the Government at this time. He moved, seconded by Dr. Tupper, that the second reading of the resolution be not concurred in, but that it be resolved that this House regard the financial policy the Government has brought down as one that increases the burdens of taxation on the people without a corresponding advantage: and further, that this House is of opinion that the deficiency in the revenue should be met by a diminution of expenditure and by a policy that will foster the agricultural, mining and manufacturing industries Mr. Mackenzie briefly reviewed the speech of Sir John A. Macdonald, and showed the fallacies he had uttered. He

of every article they consumed increased sixty-two per cent. If no better arguments than he heard advanced were offered, the House could easily vote down the amendment. A tax on tea would not affect the price of that article to the consumer, and could be removed any time without disturbing the commercial condition of the country. The debate continued till recess.

After recess. Mr. Dymond resumed the debate. He quoted Sir John Macdonald's speeches at picnics, and demanded that he should formulate the charges he made against the Government at those gatherngs now in Parliament. These charges were either true or false; if true, we should not vote money for a Government corrupt, as Sir John represented this to be to the country; if true, the leader of the Opposition should follow the example of the present Postmaster General, and move a resolution embodying his charges. He (Sir John) has not done so; and the fact that he has not done so, and dare not do so; and the fact that he has not done so is a proof of moral cowardice and conscious inability to substantiate his charges. Mr. Bunster spoke against the imposition on malt. Mr. Greenway strongly supported the action of the Government, and denounced the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition as claptrap. He had been read out of the Conservative party because he voted in the interests of the country instead of

The debate continued till after midnight when the House adjourned. OTTAWA, March 3.

In the Public Accounts Committee, Mr Domville called attention to the salary paid Wm. Colwell, and asked why he had been dismissed from the Custom House. Mr. Holton thought no explanation of the acts of the Council could come before the committee, except in so far as it related

Mr. Bewell moved that the details the account of $1,125 paid the Times and Free Press for printing the budget speech be submitted to the committee; also, for details of the amount of $32,332 paid for post-office printing, advertising and stationery for 1876; also, for full details of expenses, particularly of the advertising

Sir John A. Macdonald asked if it was proper that such a motion should pass. Mr. Mackenzie went into the merits of the question. He could see no reason why the Government should resist the motion. The motion was adopted. Mr. Mitchell moved for orders in Counil in relation to smelt fisheries in the harbor of Bathurst. Mr. Young moved for returns relating to the number of failures, and assets and liabilities of insolvent estates, and the number and character of the compromises which have taken place throughout Ca-

Mr. Robinson then moved for a return of the instructions given the Northern Railway Commission, and in a speech of some length defended his acceptance of over $5,000 in aid of his election fund as a candidate for the representation of Algoma, and also his overdraft of his personal account by a sum nearly as large, on the ground that his services as President of the Company were deserving of such consideration. The Company, he said, desired a representative in Parliament. He complained of not having been called before the Commissioners to give his testimony, asserted that the Commission was illegal and unconstitutional, and thought he had been unfairly dealt with by the Government for political reasons, Mr. Ross (Middlesex) followed in a brief speech, in which he taunted Mr. Robinson with having been a representative not of Algoma but of the Northern Railway, and declared it was a new feature of constitutional government for public comvanies to have representation in Parliament. He also remarked upon the liberality of the Northern Railway in subscribing to start the Mail newspaper, and had no doubt Sir John Macdonald prized their contribution to the testimonial on his behalf as the most valuable of all the subscriptions. Mr. Oliver rose to continue the debate when six o'clock was called.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie explained the whole circumstances which led to the enquiry into the affairs of the Northern Railway, stating that the Commission was appointed upon the advice of Colonel Bernard, Q. , then Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Blake being absent in England at the time. He further stated that Mr., now Senator. Hope refused to act as a Commissioner because he was a fellow Director with Mr. Cumberland, manager of the Northern Railway, of a leading bank, and did not think he could properly sit in judgment under the cirumstance.

Dr. Tupper fellowed, and characterized Sir John as a stainless patriot, and Blake as a foul-mouthed slanderer. Debate continued very late, becoming so outrageous at one time, that the Speaker threatened to adjourn. Sir John said Laird was a liar, and Tupper called Blake a foul-mouthed slanderer.

A Heap of Snakes.

There is nothing inviting about snakes that I could ever discern, yet, anything written about them never failed to interest me. Coming on one of the tribe unexpectedly always caused me to start and shudder, although next moment I would be pursuing him, stick in hand. If this reptile has any friends I should like to see even one of them. It matters not that the specimen in question may be harmless the feelings are no wise changed: he is pursued with relentless hate and slain without mercy.

I never saw a "heap" of snakes except once, nor had the like been seen by any of our party before, though all had heard of such a phase of reptile vagary. I had read of such a thing before but the conditions-an open desert plain-were altogether different We were following the Green River about one hundred miles above where it empties into the Colorado: A harder looking tract would be hard to find. On every side were barren ranges, spurs and isolated peaks over which the eye wandered in vain in search of any green thing or verdant spot. Occasionally a stunted pine might be seen stuck amongst the rocks, its withered branches and parched foliage pointing to heaven as if in mute supplication. On the banks of the stream, under ordinary circumstances, we would find a strip of alluvial grass-covered land with here and there a cottonwood tree or a clump of willows. Here, even this luxury is denied us. A huge drain some three hunturn of all expenditure of the Intercolonial dred feet in depth cut through the an awful blackness with an occasional breaks the surface of the water. Across, the precipitous face breaks into steps plateau is the only indication of the river. Looking down we can see only wriggling serpent where a fallen boulder and ledges at times, and these are backed by fissures and caves in which the sunshine is lost in impenetrable gloom. Along this irregular gorge we wend our way trying to vary the monotony of the journey and forget the heat by an inspection of any curiosity which may offer. About 11 a. m., the sound of a waterfall is heard close at hand. Our mules hear it too and exhibit a sense of fear which is unaccountable. Peering down, we fail to see any indications of a break in the course of the stream, nevertheless, we know that it must be in our vicinity. The subdued, hissing sound cannot be far off. An exclamation from one of the party causes me to follow with my eve the line indicated by a hand which is almost nerveless with horror and excitement. It is no wonder .-Even with an impassible river between the sight is enough to make one's flesh creep. On the flat ledge about twenty feet below our level, is a grey, writhing heap some three and a half feet high, with a base about eight feet broad. It is evident that we are not looked on with favour, and that our approach has been noted for some time. We are confronted by an array of fiery flashing eyes and open, hissing mouths, which are fascinating in their hideousness. Our every movement is followed by the gleaming, hateful orbs, and a fresh occasion of hissing, spiteful wrath. The heap is never still for an instant; a cheveaux de frise (excuse the French; I cannot find an English synonym) of pointed serpents' tongues and a battery of baleful light which fills us with undefinabled read and fairly makes the soles of the feet tingle as if one stood on a plank over some dizzy height. The air seems to become thick and heavy as if poisoned by the seething mass which seem only anxious to expel all the breath from their bodies. The animals grow restive and some of the onlookers-strong men-actually grow sick, turning as white as a sheet. It is proposed to give them the benefit of a volley from our entire battery and agreed to unanimously. The snakes eye us with some attention as if they supposed there was something unusual about to happen or in progress. At the first discharge the whole mass seemed to shrink; at the second they began to move in a body towards the holes and disappeared leaving not so much as a trace of blood on the rocks though hundreds must have been killed. What could have induced this gathering? It might have been that the cold of the previous night (at this altitude the nights are always chilly) had caused the sunny side of the rock to be chosen as a desirable place in which to repose as contasted with the damp, slimy cavern .-That they could all subsist in this place was an impossibility unless we suppose them to be far more moderate in their demands and desires than their brethern elsewhere. I am inclined to think that this was the winter quarters of the serpent tribe which occupied the country
