GOING TO THE BAD. BY EDMUND YATES.

CHAPTER V.-KITTY. Dr. Travers came down from time to time during the Summer to pass two or threedays with his wife, and saw enough of Mrs. Moreton to be satisfied that the praises bestowed upon her were not undeserved. Mrs. Travers remained in Brauxholme until late in the Autumn, when her husband fetched her back to London, completely cured of all symptoms of her

On parting with Mrs. Moreton, the doctor presented her with a valuable diamond bracelet, worth several hundred pounds.

"This is a present from myself and my wife, dear Mrs. Moreton, and you must not refuse to accept it. It may seem strange to you that, knowing your simple taste and habits of life. I should have chosen such a souvenir, but to be candid with you, though I know nothing of your position or your means.] have an idea that you might one day be in need of money, and you will then find this bracelet very useful. Merely for a temporary purpose, of course, for I trust that with the intimate relations on which we have been living, and the deep obligation you have laid us under. you would not hesitate to apply to me in any time of need." In the calm evening twilight on the day that Doctor and Mrs. Travers had taken their departure, the old vicar, Mr. Harvey, walked down the village street, and striking off up a narrow side lane that led to the cliff, stopped before a low, one storied, whitewashed cottage that stood by itself without another human habitation near, overlooking the wide-spread ocean below.

The vicar unlatched the wicket gate, and passing through a little garden, which even at this sad time of the fall of the leaf, seemed well laid out and neatly kept, rapped with his stick at the cottage door.

It was opened by a young girl about sixteen years old, with a bright, intelligent face.

Immediately on recognizing the visitor the girl's eyes brightened, she gave a sharp cry indicative of pleasure, but attered no words.

The old vicar smiled, and patted her shining head approvingly. Then pointing to the inner room, went through a rapid pantomimic action. The girl replied in the same way, but even more rapidly.

It was her only means of communication with the world, for she was deaf and dumb.

Nodding his head, and again smiling at her, Mr. Harvey passed by the girl, and entering the little sitting-room, found himself confronted by a woman, who suspended her task of dusting the little ornaments scattered here and there, with a feather brush which she held in her hand, to bid him welcome.

Sweet-looking was the term most applicable to this woman, for her features were not regular, and her charm lay in her expression.

Her eyes were large and gray, her nose a little too thick for classic beauty. her mouth somewhat large, with full lips, and small, wholesome-looking, white teeth. She was about the average height, and as she drew herself up, with one hand holding back the truant dark hair, which had escaped from its knot, and was straying about he shoulders, and the other extended in welcome, she towered considerably above the vicar, who, never very tall, was now shrunken by age.

"I thought you would come to see me to-day," she said, in a soft, clear voice; "but I had almost given up expecting you, and you find me literally almost up to my elbows in work."

"You have been so long away from home, Mrs. Moreton, that I suppose you found things all in confusion." "No, indeed. Poor Hannah is the cleanest and most industrious creature possible; but there are, of course, certain things which she can not be expected todo, and which I, in my few minutes' daily visit here, have not had leisure to attend to."

"You will have leisure enough now, Mrs. Moreton," said the vicar, smiling. "Yes, indeed; I already miss our dear | paid for such work as that." friend very much, and what it will be bear to imagine.'

"You will have the satisfaction thinking that the health which Mrs. Travers will be enjoying, will, under Providence, be mainly due to your kind attention to her."

"It will be a great consolation to know that I was of use." said Mrs. Moreton, quietly. "Dr. Travers was anxious that I should go and stay with them in London during the Winter, but I told them that it was impossible."

"Impossible! And why? This is always a dull place in the winter, my dear, and this year you will find it duller than ever-why not accept the invitation, and "It would be impossible," she repeated; "I can not go."

"Well," said the vicar, mildly, "you are the best judge of your own affairs. my dear, though I should be sorry enough to lose you, and it was only for her, "don't you think it is rather unyour own good that I endeavored to wise of you to keep a valuable thing like persuade you to go."

They talked a little more of village matters, and then the old vicar bade his friend good night, and walked out into the dark night.

Mrs. Moreton remained at the door watching his retreating figure as long as she could see it, and then returned to She and the vicar had been conversing by the fire there, and darkness had come on rapidly, and it was time to light the candle.

She was taking a match in her hand for that purpose, when her attention was attracted by a low tapping on the window glass.

She paused and listened. The tap- vanity!" ping came again.

She stooped to the window, and raising it a little, said: "What is wanted? Who is there?" "Tis I, Kitty; be quick and open the

The next moment a man entered with a felt hat slouched over his eyes, and a home, all for your sake, and do you heavy overcoat wrapped about him. Throwing these off, he stood revealed by the flickering firelight as Sir Ferderick Randall. CHAPTER VI.-HUSBAND AND WIFE. The first thing Sir Frederick Randal did, after ridding himself of his encumbering wraps, was to step to the door and turn the key in it. "You need not be afraid, Frederick said Kitty, looking at him in sorrowfu surprise: "there is no one here to intrude upon you."

"No one," he muttered, turning round to her. "You have a servant. have you not? You don't live in this place by yourself?"

"I have a servant," Kitty replied; but if you recollect, I wrote to you that she was deaf and dumb."

"So you did," he said, with a short laugh. "That was a deucedly clever move of yours, Kitty, to take a dummy of that kind. It is not often one has the chance of getting such a trustworthy person as that about them."

"It was not done out of those mo tives, Fred," said Kitty, with a grave smile, "but merely out of charity." "Anyhow, it comes to the same thing," said Sir Frederick, gruffly; "but dummy can see if she cannot hear, and it's as well to keep her out. Let me get near the fire and warm myself a bit; there is confoundedly cold waiting outside. I looked in at the window two or three times, and I thought that old fool would

That mad and philanthropic scheme of going out to nurse some one, and of which you wrote to me, does not seem to have done you any harm."

"No, I don't think I am any the worse for that," said Kitty, cheerfully: "a little tired, perhaps, that's all.'

"Oh, one must not mind that," said he, leaning back in the chair and stretching out his legs before the fire. "I suppose you had your meals every day with these people, didn't you, for you have not written for any money lately for household bills? And it was a deuced good thing you didn't, for I hadn't any to send you."

"Are matters still going badly with you, then, Fred!" said Kitty, taking her chair beside him, laying her hand upon his knee, and looking up anxiously into

"About as badly as they well could," he replied. "This trip to the continent, from which you have just returned, did you

"There is not much to tell, Fred, though I have something which I think will be a pleasant surprise to you, but I will keep that until later. What an age, since I saw you! The last time was in the Spring, when you sent for me to meet you at Exeter, and I should not have seen you then, I suppose, if you had not been obliged to come down to some races in the neighborhood."

"Don't grumble, Kitty," he said, savagely; "I hate being grumbled at!" "I am not grumbling, dear," she said drawing her chair close beside him, and putting her arm through his. "I was only thinking what a curious life ours is. However, to return to what I was

ed, Kitty, making yourself a servant in that way-you ought to have been well

"I should have been more than paid when the Winter comes on, I can not by their kindness to me. Mrs. Travers and the doctor could not say too much in my praise, and they were as affectionate and as loving in their manner to me as if I had been their own sister." "Affectionate ways don't cost much."

growled Sir Frederick. "No," said Kitty, rising and going into the inner room, "but they gave me more substantial proofs of their regard. What do you think of this, Fred?" she cried, returning with a small leather case, and placing it in his hand.

"Goodness, Kitty!" he exclaimed, as he opened it, and his gaze fell upon the bracelet inside. "Where did you get

"Dr. Travers gave it to me," she said "Handsome!" cried Sir Frederick 'It must be worth nearly three hundred pounds, I should say. Don't you think," he added, looking shiftily up at this in this lonesome spot?"

She looked anxiously at him for a moment, then burst into a forced laugh. "Lonesome!" she cried. "It may strike you as lonesome, but I think nothing of it. All the people about here know me, and no one would dream of

"Then you don't think it would be safer for me to take care of it for you? Then marking the changed expression of her face, he added:

"Well, perhaps you are the best judge of such matters; and no doubt you would like to keep it by you, to look at now and then. It will gratify your woman's "Put it down to that, Fred," she said

Well, we were married, and six months afterwards your uncle died, and you told me it must still be kept a secret, for some reason I could never understand why, and here we are living on in this wretched way separated and apart-you gaining your livelihood-do not think that I mean to be harsh, but it is the truth—in a manner which is not fit for a gentleman of your position; I dwelling here in an assumed name with no one knowing whether I am wife

"I thought you were tolerably contented with it," he said.

"Did you?" she cried, her face brightening. "I am glad of that, because that shows I can not have grumbled very much. But, O Fred, I have so longed to change it all-and do you know, Fred. as I sat over the fire last evening I felt to myself as though a change were com-should go to?" he asked. "To America, Fred; I have been reading all about it in some books and newspapers which Mrs. Travers lent me, and talking about it with the doctor himself. He knows several Americans, and they all say that if people only go out there with determination and patience, they are sure to get on well."

"Tell me, Fred," she added, raising herself from his shoulder and looking earnestly into his eyes; "will you think of it -will you do it? It will be hard for you I know, at first, to give up the friends with whom your life is now passed, and to content yourself with me: but you will find I will be very loving to you, very docile, very obedient, and do everything you wish.'

He was silent for a few minutes, and sat with knitted brows and folded arms, over with you. Now tell me about your- as though some great struggle were passing through his mind. Then he spoke, keeping his face averted from her and with his eyes fixed upon the ground:

"It would not do, Kitty," he said: 'It wouldn't do at all! We are neither of us fitted to go roughing it in the way we should have to do if we carried out your suggestion: we have not been brought up in the way to bear it-at least I have not, I know-knocking about in the steerage of a ship, with a parcel of Irish emigrants, and having to fight our way out to the backwoods, and struggle or starve there! It's all very well to talk about, and sounds very romantic and spirited, and all that, but is wouldn't pay. You are right enough in saying that something must be donethat some change must be made-and that is what I have come down to talk over with you.' "Go on, Fred," she said, laying her hand on his, only too happy to think that she was to be consulted in his plan. He looked at her uneasily, guiltily, half shrinking from her touch.

"It's a difficult thing that I've got to say, Kitty," he commenced, bracing himself up to make a plunge into his subject; "but it has to be said, and therefore, I may as well go through it. The fact is, I am broke, dead beat, cornered. I have but a very little money in the world, and I do not know where to look for any more; I am deeply in debt, and I don't see a chance of my creditors holding out much longer .-Now, this being the state of affairs, there suddenly comes to me a chance of being able to clear off everything, to set myself quite free, and to be a rich man for the remainder of my life. What do you "Say to it!" she cried. "There is not much doubt as to what one would say in such a position, if the chance is one which you can honorably avail yourself of; if it involves your doing nothing of which you ought to feel ashamed, ac-"This is just the point, Kitty," he said, after some little hesitation. "It involves my doing something which can not bear even to think of."

"And that is?" she asked. "And that is parting from you," he said, looking askance at her. She strove to keep back her tears, but they were glistening in her eyes, as she

"I had hoped that that was all over. don't think I should much mind what happened so long as we were together; but Fred, we have been parted so much lately, I have seen so little of you during the past year and a half, though I suppose I must not mind the separation for a few more months, if it were to conduce so much to our future happiness. It would not be for more than a few months, would it, Fred?" His brow darkened, and the three red parallel bars appeared on his forehead. as he thought to himself:

"She won't take the hint, and I shall have to speak plainly to her.' "Look here, Kitty," he said aloud, turning to her, "the prospect is as good for me as I have said-better even-and there is only one obstacle in it, and that

JURED-BOOKS, MONEY AND PAPERS SAVED. Office of Davis & Haden, Wh'sale Liquor Dealers, No. 9 Main-st., bet. First and Second, Louisville, Ky., Oct. 19, 1876 Messrs. Halls Safe and Lock Co., Louisville, Ky. Gentlemen, -The large number 13 Double Door Fire Proof Safe purchased from you in March, 1872, was in the disastrous fire, corner Eighth and Main streets, on the night of the loth inst., when over a half million dollars of property was burned, and stood nobly one of the most severe tests possible, alling into the cellar with the walls of the building, and several hundred barrels of whiskey stored in the upper stories poured their contents into the celler, keeping the safe literally boiling in burning whiskey for over forty hours. The bricks and stone said account of administration on the said Estate were burned into ashes and lime, and it was the hottest fire eyer known in Louisville. The safe was buried several feet under the bricks and ashes for two days, and after being dug out of the ruins was opened, and we are proud to say the books and papers were found uninjured, nct even discolored

> We wish you to deliver, to-day, a duplicate of the safe to our new store, No. 9 Main street, and we will send you a check for the money. We wan other safe but a Halls. Yours truly, DAVIS & HADEN.
