himself in the bosom of his family, and, apparently, as happy as the day was long. This would, no doubt, be the opinion which any person would form from an acquaintance confined to the insight obtained during a call of an hour or two in length, nevertheless everyday intercourse will soon remove any doubts in the matter. The harmony is all on the surface. Below is bitterness and often deadly rancour, while in mild cases the husband is continually called on to mediate in petty squabbles. If he should single out one as the especial object of his favour the rest will have no hesitation in sinking any minor spites and jealousies for the purpose of forming a combination against her. She is met on every side by sneers and relentlessly persecuted whenever opportunity offers. Should sickness overtake her, all feelings be allowed to die of neglect or starvation. The protestations of the husband will not avail in this case. While he is present a tardy compliance with the laws of humaninto a state of chronic irritableness and same time. There is one of the largest experience in things worldly and sacred and best stocks of cloth in store now ever had given them a claim to more than ordinary regard. It would tend to make them undervalue the state to which all good girls should aspire and make them less anxious to join the harem of some elderly saint if they could secure social recognition in their present condition of single blessedness. With the other sex it was different but youth was robbed, to all appearance, of its joys, or mirth repressed by authority as unyielding and dictatorial as that of the old Roman parent. Young men of eighteen to twenty sat round like so many blocks and apparently received about as much consideration. If one of them opened his mouth he was stared at | from numerous windows, and there is not within himself in which state he had ample time to ponder over his audacity and want of respect to his seniors. We wonder what brought the boys there un- adopted at the Centennial Exhibition, and less to sit at the feet of the seniors and learn the ways of wisdom. The conversation could not interest them really know half their wants, and order no kind of amusement provided for them. even in the remotest degree. The story of Joe Smith (that man of God) and the finding of the plates was as threadbare as a nursery rhyme. The wrongs of Nauvoo and Jackson County were rehearsed till they had been divested of anything novel or new, and the good work pursued by Apostle Krongle in some German or Danish province is so far away that their minds are bewildered in trying to grasp and comprehend so large a portion of the universe. The announcement that Elder Sneak is coming from Wales with a full list of unmarried females is the event of the evening. Several ancient gentlemen prick up their ears; a dame or two turn somewhat pale in apprehension of another candidate for a moiety of their husband's affection; and the young man with an incipient beard like dew on a shingle winks till the water begins to run from the corners of his eyes. The women agree that the Welsh girls are far from handsome in ropes and platform, and any child can which the men all quietly acquiesce with a sly twinkle in their eyes except one irregularity of feature is abundantly made

This was considered by some even of the ladies (I do not include his own) as verging on almost the bounds of extreme moderation. The dames were portly and well preserved though sadly lacking in vivacity, I thought, but not in kindness. Each lady had her own apartments where she reigned supreme. The cooking accommodations were made use of in common, though, where the several wives cannot agree, each one has her own areplace, woodpile, separate door of egress. etc. In the evening all assembled in the sitting room where a portion of the Book of Mormon was read and a prayer offered in which, with some few unimportant exceptions, any Christian might join. I heard no profanity and none could be more rigid in their adherence to good morals, as understood by them, than these good people. The good man and his wives urged me to stay amongst them. A situation would be secured for me at once which would enable me to marry without delay. As my means increased—say at the expiration of a year—there would be no diffi-

The plan resembles that is equally effective for the purpose of showing just what is on exhibition. The advantages of this arrangement will be seen more from sight than from memoranda. Customers are not asked to order from samples, but may inspect and lay out the particular packages they desire, and thus avoid all risk of getting an article varying in the slightest degree from what they expect. This is an important consideration, as the reception of goods merely differing slightly in shade from the sample ordered from is often very annoying.

Messrs. Everitt & Butler's stock, as now arranged, forms a fine exhibit of dry goods and fancy varieties, and should be visited by every dealer in search of such articles. Mr. W. G. McFarlane, the chief buyer for the firm, has selected the best in every line, and, the purchases having been made in large quantities and at the proper seasons, the prices are as low
