What the Spring Winds are Saying.

Listen, Susie, my darling,
Here by the fireside bright,
Do you know what the winds are saying,
Abroad in the gusty night?
Moaning under the windows
Like the voice of a child that grieves,
Making the maples shiver
And creak at the cottage eaves;

Listen, Susie, my darling,
The winds are singing a song
Of the Spring that is softly stealing
From Summer lands along.
The snowdrops smile as they hear it—
A smile for the Spring's sweet sake—
And the shy little violets whisper :
"We hear, we are broad awake."

No matter, Susie, my darling,
Though the Spring winds drearily blow,
I am sure that the daisies are stirring,
Down under the sheltering snow,
In spite of the blustering weather
The trees are budding again,
And the daffodils whisper together,
And wait for the April rain.

Nine Days in Salt Lake City.

By George J. Forbes, Kouchibouguac.

CHAPTER V.

I had considered the subject in many of its phases. There is no doubt that while good health reigned in the family, the possessor of a dozen or more wives would be a king in his way. He could literally rest in the bosom of his family. A competition for favour among the fair sex would result in securing him every possible convenience and domestic comfort. Bewitching smiles would hail his incoming, and his departure to the scene of his daily toil would be the signal for a display of tenderness in the shape of love-laden glances which could not be otherwise than inspiring. In this respect there might be too much of a good thing. The lord of a dozen women would have concentrated on him a battery of loving light which could not be otherwise than enervating in its intensity, unless the subject were of the most phlegmatic temperament.

The scattered rays of an October sun are extremely agreeable, but if we concentrate them by means of a convex glass disc the party who occupies the focus would find his position far from desirable and--and so we imagine would the owner of a dozen wives.

Then, look at this phase of the subject. If we keep a woman in health—or she keeps us, which amounts to the same thing, besides being often only too true, especially in Salt Lake—we must surely do the same thing in sickness. There are constantly recurring periods of disease either contagious or epidemic, to say nothing of minor ailments which, in peculiarly trying seasons, assume an alarming character. Now, imagine one to be the owner of ten wives, if you please. My disposition is tender and affectionate in my family relations, my love descending by easy stages till it includes the very smallest of the numerous "olive branches." Typhoid fever has invaded the household and laid its iron grasp on the family treasures. Within a fortnight I have consigned to the dust seven wives and eighteen children. I have shed barrels of tears, leaving my body and skin as dry as a piece of old parchment. I've worn crape around my hat and on my sleeve, and bunches of the same sable woe indicator cling like burrs all the way from the nape of my neck and depend from my coat tail. My presence, like a moving hearse, puts a damper on all amusements, and I am pointed out in pity as one on whom the hand of the Lord has been particularly heavy. The Local Yell and Enoch's Chariot have each honored me with the following notice in their columns:—

"Terrible fatality."—"Our esteemed and sainted Brother Forbes hath been fearfully afflicted in his family relations. Like that good man, Joseph Smith, the Most High has chosen in His wisdom to sorely oppress him. Death at one fell swoop has removed from his tender and fostering care seven worthy women and eighteen interesting children. Our sorely chastened brother may now be considered almost a bachelor again and, should on account of his manifold troubles receive the most tender consideration from the ladies. Under their cheering influence his griefs—great as they undoubtedly are—will become a thing of the past, and he will again take his place as one of the pillars of the Church and State. The Lord taketh away wives and the Lord will yet bestow more according to his promise. Our brother hath our sincere condolences."

How could I put myself in the way of such a fearful train of affliction. Under ordinary circumstances the woes of humanity are quite sufficient without multiplying them by wholesale and voluntarily. Death in the family, at all times solemn and trying, cannot surely be lessened by applying the principle that familiarity breeds contempt, nor do we think we would be doing justice to the finer feelings of human nature by supposing the average man can reconcile himself to the loss of loved ones by applying the doctrine that they "are not dead but only gone before," however agreeable such a course of procedure may be to the doctrines of Christianity.

Again, suppose we attend some social gathering—a ball for instance. The saints dance—David danced. Fortunately for our sense of modesty all the woman cannot go. The children have to be attended to and the domestic machinery cannot be allowed to come to a stand still. Then the question of fitting dresses promptly fixes a limit to the number of my escort. To fit out the household in novelties in the shape of dresses, bonnets, ribbons, gloves &c, would speedily bring on a financial crisis in my business. My stand had best be one of neutrality, tor if I interfere, I am in a worse position than the representative who tried to please the temperance people by an adjustment of the liquor tariff. For a week the household has been in state of feverish commotion. My wife Dorintha has been dressed in smiles for two days only to be driven into despondency by some new complication not choosing, like good, sensible Sarah Ann, to present herself for criticism in her last year's finery. Lucity Ann who has money in her own right, is as gay with fast colours as a flamingo or a savage in his war paint and Cynthia has got together a pile of material about which the only mystery seems to be as to where she will hang the several articles. Well the matter is finally arranged and I am off like a Hudson River Tugboat in charge of a fleet of wood barges. After handing the doorkeeper a bundle of tickets about the bulk of a pack of cards we are allowed to enter and at the expiration of half an hour, I have secured seats for my numerous family, and found a congenial companion with whom I am discussing the topics of the day. Being a comparative stranger my acquaintance with the assembled throng is by no means general. My good wife Dorothy who prides herself on the respectability of her connexions is determined that this state of things shall be so no longer. Coming along at the head of a crowd like the tail of an election, I am introduced to them severally as her husband. Thanking my stars that this ordeal is over, I look around and see Cynthia Ann at the head of a brigade of her relations—a truly heterogenous crowd—to whom she insists on introducing me as her husband. By Lucity Ann I am dragged around that she may show her husband and cannot refuse a like favour to the kind and affectionate Sarah Jane. Great Heavens! I am run and owned in shares like a joint stock company, but corporations are notably soulless and I am not. Because I cannot divest myself of all my old ideas and am filled with shame at having my immoralities thus unblushingly showed in the face of the world. While in this state of mind my old friend Jones who has come all the way from Nephi takes me in charge. He is quite a family man so makes me acquainted with the Mrs. Joneses till my head swims and my recollection becomes confused. His eldest daughter is an interesting girl—"open to proposals from a worthy man" he adds looking meaningly at me. In common politeness, I can do nothing less than pay the girl some attention, to my friend Jones' manifest gratification and with marked effect as far as my family are concerned. Evidently the good women who own me are seriously disturbed at the prospect of a further distribution of my affections.—Dorothy especially, is crabbed and almost savage. She hints that Jones wishes to get rid of his daughter, that he may take another wife, when he will have one for every day in the month. Would'nt I wish to follow his example? she adds sarcastically; "the hardened old villain," she repeats in an undertone. Sarah Ann who is fond of dancing, and besides wishes to keep me out of harm's way or, in other words, clear of the fascinations of Jones' daughter, insists that I shall dance with her. Out of sheer good nature I acquiesce, not being fond of this light amusement, and far from a proficient. Dorothy who (I beg her pardon) can no more dance than a grizzly bear, asks me in a tone that is equivalent to a command, to go through a polka with her, which I accomplish with immense labour, and then fancy I will solace myself with a rest. There is no such thing in store for me. For the sake of domestic peace I am under the necessity of dancing a round robin—so to speak—with my entire household, and in return for my condescension and efforts to please, am met on every hand for a whole month by sneering allusions to Jones' daughter.

Murder and Wrecking in Newfoundland.

An Halifax despatch dated the 22nd inst., states that a vessel commanded by Capt. Ridout was lost on the French shore of Newfoundland in 1874. A St. John's paper of Thursday last says a person from Bonne Bay gives the following information relative to the loss and disappearance of the crew:—"Captain Ridout had £200 with him at the time he was supposed to be murdered. The craft went ashore close by a tilt occupied by an old hunter, commonly known as Jacko. All the crew got on shore and built a tent, and were all right. One day a certain B. W,——with members of his family, understood to be hunters, wreckers, &c., visited the tent, and offered to pilot the shipwrecked crew to the channel. The offer was accepted, and the party started on the journey, but while crossing a pond the crew were shot, three of them falling at the first volley. The W——s then cut a hole in the ice and put the bodies down, after having robbed them of the money. Knowing that Jacko was aware of their having gone with the Ridouts, they went back to his place and gave him money to silence him.—Lately Jacko has been very sick, and believing he was about to die has confessed the matter."

The informant also states that a Nova Scotia craft fishing there was found on shore, and the captain, named Sterling, was found dead under a rock, with a small hatchet lying by his side, his remains showing that he had been choppep to death. The people firmly believe that the crew were all murdered by the same gang. Many other vessels and crews, he believes, meet with a similar fate. He further states that at Port au Port the people do little else than plunder, and expresses the opinion that they would not hesitate to use lights to decoy vessels on shore. The matter has been placed in the hands of the Chief of Police of St. John's to investigate, and it is said that the officers of H. M. S. Eclipse, now visiting the shore, will be directed to seek information relative to the alleged crimes.

Chaff.

"Well, Pat, glad you've recovered, but were you not afraid to meet your God?" "Oh, no your riverence ; it was the other chap that I was afeared uv ?"

Jamie, how's your church coming on?" "Not so vera weel. There's na ane belangs' cept me and brother Sandy, and I'm thinking he's na orthodox, and must be put out."

Somebody asked Moody, in one of the Boston Tabernacle services, "can a man use tobacco and be a Christian ?" His reply, "Yes, a filthy one," made the people laugh.

A New Bedford teacher asked his class to explain the difference between "dear," and "deer." One bright little fellow exclaimed, "one is a biped and the other is a quadruped,"

When your wife puts a scuttle of coal on the top stairs, and you have a race with it to see which reaches bottom first, do not swear, but hereafter say that you will carry it yourself all the way up.

"Have you tried the blue glass remedy yet?" asked Smith of Jones. "No," said Jones ; "that is, only indirectly. My milkman, judging from the beautiful color of his milk, is trying it on his cows, and so indirectly on me."

The following is told of a grave-digger in a cathedral town in the north of England : One day, while "gathering in" the remains of an aged parishioner, he observed some women weeping by the grave side. Turning around, he sharply demanded of them. "What are ye crying for? If ye dinna bring 'em at eighty, when wad ye bring 'em?"
