If there is an archbishop near, he is the one; if not it is the bishop, And everybody wears his very best clothes. It is the general custom to give the children a new suit of clothes if possible on Christmas. If the parents cannot afford so much, they will at least contrive to give some article of dress, if it is only a pair

This has led to another custom which is in vogue especially in Constantinople, where the Armenian children are all educated in our parochal schools. These schools are located in the churchyards and are, of course, supported by the churches. Some of the children are very poor, and a collection is always taken up at the Christmas service in the church for the purpose of buying new clothes for the children whose parents cannot clothe them properly.
