DIAMOND NECKLACE.

One Sunday morning two young men sat in the smoking-room of a cozy apartment. Outside the snow was falling silently in great blue-white flakes.

On the divan, his tail and legs ornamented with tufts of curly black hair, his body shaved in the improved fashion, a poodle slumbered peacefully, and Floyd Tailer, the owner of the premises, attired in a smoking jacket of a horsey plaid, was lolling in an easy chair, his slippered feet stretched toward the fire. His companion, Arthur Van Stade, had been his greatest friend at college and this was their first meeting in three years. Van Stade had been in India killing big game, and had barely escaped having the tables turned, as a large scar across one cheek testified. Tailer had stayed at home, but to him had Tailer had stayed at home, but to him had come the greater change. As he expressed it, he was "a settled down old married man with a family"—which meant that he had the sweetest little wife in the world and a tiny mite of pink-and-white human-

"I don't suppose you will believe me when I tell you that when he came into my possession he was worth no less than $1,000.

The spring after you went away," he went on, "having finished my course, I went over to the other side for the London season. I went to London and in London I stayed long after the time I had allotted to that city had expired. It was there I met Edith. In six weeks we were engaged. The remainder of the summor I passed in Scotland with the family of my fiancee. They had planned to go to Nice when the cold weather came on, and of course I determined to go with them. We went as far as Paris together, but at the last moment I was detained in that city for a few das and was obliged to allow the rest of the party to proceed without me, promising to join them in a week at most. ing to join them in a week at most.
"I had run short of funds, and the remittance expected from my father had not arrived. This I did not consider necessary to explain to Edith and her family. I said vaguely that business kept me in Paris. Four days after their departure the letter from my father arrived. He had heard of my engagement and, to my satisfaction, approved of it. Besides the amount expected, he sent an additional $1,000, with which he instructed me to buy a suitable present for Edith. As the modest diamond I had bought for our engagement had been my only girt, I was pleased and gratified with my father's generous present. "The following morning I started out in search of something for my dear girl, whom I should be with the very next day. My $1,000, which had seemed so much, now appeared ridiculously small, and I had almost despaired of finding anything worthy of my beloved when my eyes fell upon an extremely beautiful necklace, consisting of two rows of pearls caught together at intervals by small diamond clasps. "I asked the price.

plied the salesman. "Exactly the sum I had to spend! I bought it without a moment's hesitation. The little blue box was about to be wrapped up when the salesman discovered some imperfection in the clasp. He was profuse in his apologies and said that it would be repaired and ready for me the following morning. I explained that this would not do, as I was to leave the city on the pickt express for Nicco night express for Niece. After a moment's hesitation the jeweler promised that I should have it at 6 o'clock, without

"As I was leaving the store I noticed a woman standing by my side. I say I noticed a weman; it would be more correct to say that I noticed a beautiful white hand with long taper fingers, on one of which was a diamond of unusual size and brilliancy. In this hand was a small jewelled watch, and as I was leaving the counter I caught a few words spoken in a

"At 6 o'clock I returned, and, true to his promise, the man had the necklace ready for me. Placing it in the inside pecket of my coat, I left the store and had just time to complete a few remaining arrangements before going to the station. I bought a first class ticket and tipped the guard, after giving him to understand in my very best French that I did not want him to put other passengers in my compartment. I tucked my travelling rug around my knees, opened a French novel when the door was opened and a woman hurriedly entered the compartment and took the seat next the window on the other side of the car. I glanced at my unwelcome companion, she was dressed in mourning of the richest material and in perfect taste. As I was noticing these details something by her side that I had at first taken for a fur cape moved. It proved to be a black French poodle, and as he sat up and turned his head toward me I saw that around his neck he wore a broad silver collar from which depended a peculiar heart-shaped padlock. "Turning to my novel, I soon forgot the intruders, nor did I again think of them until perhaps half an hour later, when I was startled by feeling something cold and wet pressed against my hand. It was the poodle's nose. He had crawled across the seat and was evidently desirous of making my acquaintance.

"'Chico, come here," exclaimed a singularly familiar voice. "The dog paid no attention to his mistress, but wagged his tail contentedly as I stroked his curly head. "You must excuse my dog, sir,' said my companion. 'He is a great pet and ex-pects every one to notice him. I am afraid he will annoy you.

"I protested that he would not, and added that I was found of dogs, poodles in particular. Perhaps my answer was due, in part, to the fact that the woman was young and very beautiful. I had only that minute become aware of this, the light having been too dim in the station to let me see her face. Her voice, too, affected me singularly; it was low and sweet and I was sure that somewhere I had heard it

"A little later, on looking up, I found that my companion was without books or that my companion was without books or papers, so taking an illustrated magazine from my satchel I offered it to her. She thanked me and smiled sweetly. After a time I grew tired of my novel and resolved to attempt a little conversation with my neighbor. I asked her if she was going to Nice. She replied that she was, and went on to say that her sister, whom she had expected would go with her, had disappointed her at the last moment.

"She spoke of her dislike for traveling alone, particularly at night, and explained that as the compartment reserved for ladies that as the compartment reserved for ladies was full she was obliged to enter mine. She was sorry to intrude, but the train was about to start and the guard had told her all the other seats were taken. I hastened to assure her that I was glad of the lucky chance that had given me so charming a companion. "As the evening wore on she opened a basket containing a dainty lunch. Would I share it with her? The cook evidently able as circumstances would permit. I turned my head toward the window, through which the surrounding country could be seen dimly in the moonlight as we rushed along, put a roll of rugs under my head and resigned myself to a night of discomfort. The next thing it was broad daylight. I awoke with a dull pain in my head and a sense of weariness that my sleep had rather increased than diminished.

"My companion was sitting by the window reading the book I had given her the night before. On perceiving that I was awake she put down her book and remarked that I was evidently a sound sleeper and that she envied me. She had passed a wretched night and was glad that we should soon be in Nice. I thought of Edith, whom I should now see so soon, and then of the surprise I had in store for red to me that perhaps it would have been better if I had consulted some woman of taste before buying it. A brilliant idea struck me—my companion was just the one to decide. I would ask her opinion. It was not too late to change the necklace for some hing else if she thought it not suitable. I was sure she would tell me candidly just what she thought.

"Unbuttoning my coat I drew the pack. age from my pocket and laid it on my lap-Removing the wrappings I opened the little blue case. For a moment I could not believe my eyes-it was empty!

"I turned quickly to my companion. She was leaning forward motionless, breathless, her face pale and in her eyes a look that I shall never forget. One hand was pressed confulsively over her heart. She had removed her gloves worn the night before, and on one finger blazed a diamond—the one I had seen the previous day at the jeweler's. In an instant I saw it all. I sprang forward and grasped her wrist—roughly, I am afraid.

"Give me back the necklace, you thief,' I cried. 'I know you,' You stood by my side yesterday in the jeweler's shop on the Avenue de l'Opera. I remember that ring and your voice. You heard me say that I was going to Nice by this train. The liquor you gave me was drugged and you thought to escape before your theft was discovered. It was a very clever scheme, but it has failed. Give me the necklace or "I stretched out my hand, thinking that, seeing the folly of further concealment and the uselessness of denial, she

'If, as you say, you have lost a necklace, your only reason for accusing me of having stolen it is that "Five thousand francs, Monsieur,' rethen ask you to prove that you ever had a necklace.' This remark was accompanied by a smile that was not pleasant to see. Until we reach Nice you will not address > me again. "She leaned back in her seat and turned her face toward the window. I felt rather than saw that she was crying. "I began to feel uncomfortable. What if, after all, I had been too ready to jump at conclusions and had been mistaken Was it not possible that the box might have been empty when I received it from the jewelers? I had not seen the necklace after it was left to be repaired, a. the box was wrapped up when called for it. My companion had insisted on an investigation that might prove her innocence-an investigation that a guil y woman would never have proposed. Besides this, she had expressed a doubt as to the existence of the necklace and had accused me of an attempt of blackmail. The more I thought of it the more unpleasant my position became.

"Suddenly my eyes fell on something bright lying on the floor of the carriage. I stooped and picked it up. It proved to be the little heart-shaped padlock I had noticed the night before on the poolle's collar. Like a flash a thought came to me; here might be the solution of the problem; at any rate I would put it to the test. No time must be lost, as we were just entering the station and in a moment more the guard would open the carriage

"Reaching across the seat with a quick motion, I drew the sleeping animal to my side. The woman sprang foward to prevent me, but she was too late. I had already torn the collar from the dog's neck and was holding it to the light that entered dimly through the window from the

"That morning as I entered Edith's par-lor the little poodle trotted contentedly by my side, and instead of the collar he wore the necklace. As for the woman, I never saw her again. - Kate Fild's Washington.
