CHATHAM, N. B., AUGUST 22, 1895.

A WOMAN'S FACE.

Only one glimpse of it was all that Julian Chestwick caught in the swaying crowd that filled the rooms on the night of Mrs. Pelgrove's masquerade ball.

Julian Chestwick had always laughed at the idea of love. But when he saw that face at Mrs. Pelgrove's masquerade ball, he furlled his banners and sent in his letters of capitulation to the little blind god with the bow and arrows.

Julian Chestwick, in spite of the theories of a life time fell in love with a Marquise of the time of Louis XIV., with big black eyes, a pale oval face, and a mouth whose sweet archness corresponded not illy with powdered locks and dainty high-heeled boots.

It came and went like a shadow—the bewitching face—and Julian Chestwick hastened to his hostess with heart that throbbed with the fevered quest.

"Tell me, Mrs. Pelgrove, who is the Marquise?" Mrs. Pelgrove started.

"My dear Mr. Chestwick there are at least half a dozen marquises here."

Julian bit his lip. To him there was but one.

He haunted the rooms like an unquiet spirit all the evening, until people began to believe that the Hungarian Prince was an ubiquity; but the face shone upon him no more.

"So you won't marry Miss Pearlfield?" asked the uncle, a choleric old gentleman, who was particularly fond of two things in this world—nutty port and his own way.

"No," said Julian recklessly. "And what the deuce is the reason?" "Because I love somebody else."

"Who?" Julian looked awkward; he could not very well say "a face." So he said nothing at all, and in consequence thereof his uncle went home in a passion and altered his will.

Miss Pearlfield married someone else and Julian Chestwick worshipped at the shrine of the oval face, contented with its remembered smiles as they haunted his dream.

"I shall see her some day," he told himself, "and until then I will wait."

He haunted the galleries of photograph artists—he stalked up and down the sunny side of Broadway what time the fashionable promenaders inundated it, staring persistently into every female face that passed—but in vain.

When Field Pakenham invited him down to a Christmas party at Pakenham Court, an old-fashioned place with wide-throated chimneys and groves of evergreen, Chestwick hesitated.

Place of New York was a great human beehive; in New York his chances of realizing the dream of his life were as five to one, compared to any other place, and yet he was too good a chess player not to comprehend that the tide of luck needs a change now and again.

"You'd better come," said Pakenham; "we shall have no end to larks."

"Shall you have a large party?" "Twenty or thirty."

"It will be such a bore." "No, it won't." "All right, then, I'll come."

"But when?" demanded Pakenham, who, having been ordered by his sisters to "be sure and secure that handsome Mr. Chestwick," was naturally desirous to clinch the nail of assent.

"Let me see. Christmas is on Friday. I'll come down to the Court on Thursday afternoon."

"All right," said Pakenham; "and mind if you fail us we'll have you hung, drawn and quartered! Why, man, there are 15 girls coming, and if I don't get some masculine help I haven't an idea what's to become of me."

"Don't get discouraged. I'll stand by you."

Pakenham wrung his friend's hand and went on his way rejoicing.

Chestwick's eyes roved from face to face, as he took his seat at the long table in the antique old dining room at Pakenham Court. There were blondes and brunettes, and blue eyes and gray, seraggy throats and dimpled shoulders, but there was no look or feature in all the gay assemblage which might suggest the French marquise.

"I wish I had stayed at home," he thought.

But Lucia Dallas took him in hand and made him talk, whether he was willing or no.

"It's all nonsense about your being a Diogenes," said that young lady. "Where's your tub and lantern?" "They're coming down by the next train."
