RAN ON THE SIDING.

"Railroadin' in the south ain't what it used to be," said the engineer, wiping his bush and forest in order to extermination hands upon a bunch of waste and taking a piece of tobacco from his overalls pocket. "Give me the good old days when we had wood-burnin' engines, easy schedules with long stops and no telegraph to bedevil us. We could run pretty much to suit ourselves then, and it goes without sayin' we had lots of enjoyment.

"Take, for instance, the fun Jim Larkins and me had one night about fifteen years ago. You see, Jim and me were both courtin' the same girl, both bein' engineers on the Wilmington, Columbia & Augusta road between Columbia and Charlotte. Ever been down there? Well, even yet the road ain't quite as good as it might be, but in them days it was a sight worse. The tracks were laid with the oldfashioned U rail on ties five feet apart and spliced with fish plates. When the wheels struck one end of the rail the other end tilted up, and I tell you it made a nervous man seasick the first time he traveled over that line. had no telegraph wire, and so could do pretty much as we pleased around Columbia, the superintendent bein' located at Charlotte. Many a time we used to get an engine out after dark and raise Cain in the neighborhood. The only trouble was that as the engines were old and rickety they couldn't stand much. They were wood-burners, and nowadays would look top-heavy with their little boilers and big stacks. When one of them got a good move on after dark, I tell you it looked like a runnin' display of fireworks, the stack throwin' out sparks and chunks of blazin' wood like a volcano.

"Old man Smith, that's Mollie's father. didn't like me near as well as he did Jim, but seein' that Mollie preferred me I wasn't carin' much about her dad's opinion. It wasn't no use for us to try to get spliceu in Columbia, for everybody knew that her father had ordered her not to be seen with me; so the only thing for us to do was to watch our chance and go off on the quiet to some place along the line. I thought it over for several days and got the whole thing in shape. I told Mollie to come down to the round-house about seven o'clock one night and I would take her for a little ride on my engine. She afraid? Well, I guess you don't know her. Why, she had run the machine herself many a

"I had given the hint to Jack, my fireman, and he was on hand when I backed out on the main track, leavin' Jim's engine in the round-house. Mollie was awaitin', and she jumped on the tank, like an engineer's sweetheart ought to do. Just as we were pullin' out Jim came around the corner. Hie eyes opened, I " Where are ye goin', Bill?' he shouted. | duke's greatest battle:

'Just out for a little ride,' I remarked. coolly, puttin' Mollie up on the box in front of me, so I had to put my arms around her to reach the levers. I saw Jim gasp and start on a run for towards Mol- I could trust the honor of England, and lie's house, where he knew her father was. "In two minutes we were spinnin', in three hummin', and in five minutes we loo in whose hands the safety and honor of were tearin' through the valley like a cvclone. It was a pitch-dark night, and not I had numbers of others, some of whom I a thing could be seen ahead. " 'There they come,' yelled Jack, before we had gone ten miles. just visible above the tree tops. We concluded at once that was Jim and Mollie's dad, and that we would have to do some pretty tall travelin' to avoid capture. Mind you, Jim carried a gun. The engines were pretty well matched, but, of course, I was somewhat nervous. Just ahead was a heavy grade five miles long, and I knew it would be a tough pull to get over it, but once on the other side of the hill our chances for getting away would be good. " 'Do your best, Jack, to keep up steam," I called across to the fireman.

"Mollie was restin' in my arms as quietly as if we had been sittin' on the haircloth sofa in her parlor, her lips half open and the wind blowin' her hair all over my face. Mighty sweet it smelled, too, but I hadn't much time to think about such things

"All of a sudden we heard a whistle and t sounded right behind us. I jumped up with dismay and looked back. There was Jim less than half a mile away, comin' like a house afire. Mollie looked, too, then her eyes fell on Jack, whose wood was gettin' low, and who rolled a barrel out from the back part of the tank and was tryin' to bust the head in. She slid out of my arms, and, holdin' onto the levers, got down beside the fireman. The first thing I knew of it was when I saw her fishin' cut big fat hams from the barrel and passin' them to Jack, who was feedin' the furnace with 'em. 'Bully for you, Jack,' I yelled, as the steam gauge jumped

"Well, that did the business. We reached the top of the grade without Jim gainin' another inch, and then we begun to slide downward. Great Jupiter, how we did drop down that hill. The noise was terrific and the old machine rocked like a cradle. Lookin' back, I saw Mollie standin' on the tank holdin' on by the brake, her dress flutterin,' her hair blowin' and her eyes shinin' like stars. I'll never forget that sight.

"I knew that as soon as Jim reached the top of the hill he'd after us lickety split, and I begun to fear we couldn't make the riffle this time, but all at once a thought struck me. I shut off steam and GUTTER, yelled to Jack to put on the band.

He jumped to the wheel, Mollie helpin' him, and in a few minutes we had nearly

HUNTING PYTHONS IN NATAL

The Natives Burn the Forest and Drive the Reptiles in a Newly Dug Pit. The colony of Natal, South Africa, abounds in boa constrictors and pythons. While they do not attack men they are especially destructive of cattle, sheep and oxen, and for this reason parties are formed by hunters and natives to burn the

Some of the soldiers at Pietermaritzburg were recently informed by a party of neighboring Zulus of the whereabouts of a huge python that had been destroying their oxen. The soldiers, with 200 natives, started off to capture the snake, and having located it, the forest was fired for about a mile roundabout, an enormous pit having been previously dug in towards the centre of the inclosed space. What with the burning brush and the shouts of the excited Kaffirs they soon drove the reptile towards the pit, where, closing in upon him, they forced him into it. The python proved to be one of enormous size, being thirty-two feet long and forty-one inches in circumference. It appeared to be quite stupid or dazed, having just eaten a young ox that had been let into the inclos-

An enormous cage with iron bars half way down the front having been constructed the snake was got out of the pit and taken into Maritzburg in the cage. Here it is kept on exhibition at the barracks, and is fed twice a week, two Kaffir goats at each meal. It will not eat anything that has been already killed for it. preferring to kill its food itself. The goats are thrust through a small door at the end of the cage alive, when, fixing its great eyes upon them, the snake suddenly lunges forward and crushes them in its powerful folds. After covering them with a thick slime about an inch thick, before swallowing, it flattens them out by squeezing them, and then devours them almost at a gulp. After this the python goes to sleep and does not wake until it is time to

A gentleman in Maritzburg owns a python that has been confined in a cage for over thirteen months. During this period the snake has not eaten a mouthful of food of any kind, although every conceivable delicacy of likely snake diet, such as frogs. birds, rats and meat, has been set to tempt its appetite. Its fast seems not to be broken and the ower has at last abandoned the idea of coaxing the coily prisoner with food. It drinks a very small quantity of water. In a dormant state this fasting would be better understood, for in this state reptiles of this description have been known to exist for periods of eighteen months, or even three years.
