MORALS AND THE MODES.
Twas at the meeting of the ways
The maiden pensive stood,
And with her hand would lead
Most safely through the wood.
A straight and narrow pathway led
Directly to her goal,
Most trying for her gown and hat
And wearing for her soul.
A broader road led deviously,
But smoothly thitherward,
And smoothly thitherward,
But smoothly thitherward,
And I will tell you,
"I do not like to struggle with
The underbrush and leaves;
Beside the other is far Too narrow for my sleeves."

sharpening his axe upon a grindstone. Benvenuto's heart beat at every turn of the stone. Carlo had set him down upon the road, and he was now standing with frantic gestures a crowd of hearers. The entire court population had assembled to-day to watch the fall of the first convict upon the gallows.
Nobody but the tree. Even when confronted by death, his giant friend did not forget the little cripple. While Benvenuto perched upon a branch, his eyes with his little hand, there fluttered to his very feet a handsome leaf—not green like the other leaves, but of a delicate, golden brown. Benvenuto picked it up and pressed it to his lips. Slowly, and very slowly, he dragged himself through the branches, until he stood beside the tall gentleman, who was directing the work of the three executioners.
Then he paused, afraid to carry out what had, at first, been his intention. But another glance at the tree gave him courage. Flanking the tall gentleman by the coatleeve, he knelt down on his knickerbockers and faltered out in the Tuscan patois:
"Listen to me, I implore you, great signor. Cut not with the cruel axe this beautiful tree. It is my friend, my only friend, and I love it more dearly than life. It is my tree, signor, and my father's and mother's; the tree of my brothers and sisters; the tree of Big Bicco, who cut down the first convict upon the gallows; the tree of all the people who dwell within the court. Great signor, I implore you to spare this tree, for the locust tree is part of his life."
Here Benvenuto paused to take breath. The fire of his poet soul was shining in his eyes. The eloquence of old Rome was upon his tongue.
As he spoke a tall gentleman stared at him in mute astonishment, while the tall gentleman, who was directing the work of the three executioners, clapping her withered hands and proudly telling the neighbors that this was Benvenuto's tree, lent him a heart, and he began once more:
"Great signor, let me die in place of the tree. I am but a cripple—not fit to be a convict, and I have no work of my own. The tree is most glorious, and a mighty blessing to the court. Let the beautiful tree live and take my life instead."
His appeal ended, Benvenuto said his way towards the now motionless grindstone, and pressed his lips upon the gnarling bark of the tree.
The tall gentleman looked upon the crowd in a bewildered manner. "What do you say to this man's appeal?" he asked. "Can't some of you fellows interpret?"
"Tutto Tanganeli stepped forward with a sudden fervor, and spoke English quite fluently. For word for word he translated Benvenuto's appeal, while the tall gentleman, crouching on the ground, anxiously watched the face of the tall gentleman, and made ready his little sword for the death he fancied near at hand.
The tall gentleman looked serious, and then bowed solemnly again, as Benvenuto's bowery phrase were made plain to him.
"Is that true?" he asked at length.
"It is true, signor," replied Tutto Tanganeli, who prided himself upon his stock of English idioms.
"Look here, Joe," said he to the oldest of the executioners, "did you hear such a funny business? Let's be off. I ain't goin' to cut down no trees in this here court."
There was a hurried consultation between the tall gentleman and the executioners. Then the latter resumed their coats, while the former announced to the Italians that he had decided to postpone cutting down their tree, until he could read the facts before the Board of Commissioners. "As for the kid," he said, "he's a regular Jim Landy. Come here Johnny, and shake hands."
Benvenuto, who had not understood any of the remarks, came forward with a leaden face, but undaunted mien, now fully convinced that he was to sacrifice his life for that of the tree. He was making up his mind to ask the tall gentleman for one more night on earth, when the words of Tutto Tanganeli, who silver dollar into his hand and made him understand the tree was spared.
The words of Tutto Tanganeli, who silver dollar into his hand and made him understand the tree was spared.
There was plenty of spaghetti for Benvenuto that evening. Even Grandmother Nina did not scold him, and next day he had his hair cut in a triumphal jaunt on the organ.
The tree for the locust tree, it was so grateful to the tall gentleman, yellow and all sorts of colors in honor of Benvenuto.
When it is remembered that the chief of the "Zulu" woman in "South Africa" is willing to give up her own life for food and tobacco, and that during this occupation the baby is ever present, it will be readily understood that the cradle is an important form.
As a matter of fact these women do this curious work with a heavy, growing child slung across the back, while the poorer class of women the cradle is simply a white strip of some soft skin, which is passed around the waist in such a manner as to leave a kind of pocket behind, and in this the child will lie, slumber, unattended of the mother, and the abrupt movements necessitated by the work. The wife of a chief, however, will have a much more elaborate cradle, and will carry the child in the same fashion.
FASHION FADS.
Cut-away jackets of velvet are much liked by young girls.
Sleeveless jackets of various materials with puffed-up collars are popular.
A dress of cloth with a narrow moire panel down the front is among the new importations.
Muffs are somewhat larger than heretofore. Many muffs will be used during the coming winter without other furs.
Capes of moire are trimmed with fur collars and lined with bright silk. One of the handsomest of these garments was recently made to order and lined with very stiff buff.
Ermine, from becoming popular, has become a fad, and every woman who has money to buy it wants ermine in some form or another. The only difficulty is its scarce and high price.
Really fine ermine is almost impossible to obtain, and the most fabulous prices are paid for it.—N. Y. Ledger.

LIFE SAVED BY
AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL
"Seven years ago, my wife had a severe attack of lung trouble which the physicians pronounced consumption. The cough was extremely distressing, especially at night, and was frequently attended with the spitting of blood. The doctors being unable to help her, I induced her to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was surprised at the great relief it gave. Before using one whole bottle, she was cured, so that now she is quite strong and healthy. That this medicine saved my wife's life, I have never the least doubt."—K. MORRIS, Memphis, Tenn.
