PILGRIMS AND STRANGERS-THE DAY'S NEWS-THE MARKETS, ETC. It is mentioned as something remarkable that Jonathan Duane Wheeler of Stonington, Conn., owns and occupies a farm that has descended to him from his great-great-grandfather who lived 160 years ago. It has never passed from the family of its original occupant, whose ashes mingle with those of seven generations of his descendants. Circumstances of this kind are probably rarer on this continent than in any other civilized country in the world because the unrest of the pilgrims and the cavaliers, the pioneers of Canadian life, is inherited by their posterity and 160 years more will probably pass by before it will be eliminated. Wherever chance places him the American, and in a considerable measure the Canadian, is at home, if he can be said to have a home anywhere and in consequence the ties of kinship are less binding here than in many places elsewhere. We are like rolling stones rather than the everlasting hills. We are all tramps from "Weary Walker" to the millionaire who builds a villa at Newport, then at Bar Harbor, then at Lennox and abandons them all, one after the other. We think the Wheelers of Stonington, Conn., are a substantial people; that they are intelligent, forehanded, hospitable and that. and never have any bickerings with their out of all dose many don't you sink dat neighbors. Their fields are well tilled, you can buy me one, jess on'y one?" their fences without gaps, their dwelling His eyes were two round wishes. and outhouses commodious, cheerful and permanent. The farm is a world in itself to its possessors; the home fragrant with pleasant memories and anticipations. with disappointment.

"Mamma," he said at last, choking down "In that mansion used to be Free-hearted Hospitality."

There groups of merry children played,
There youths and maidens dreaming strayed;
O precious hours! O golden prime
And affluence of love and time! Even as a miser counts his gold, Those hours the ancient time-piece told,-Forever-never! turning, trudged manfully away from the Never-forever."

Undoubtedly the time will come when our people will take root, as it were: when we shall dig and build for posterity as well as for ourselves, and when the word home will have a far wider meaning than is now attached to it. Two deaths occurred among the inmates

Saturday with 270 head of cat le, 53 horses and 150 sheep on board. A good many Christmas boxes went to England by the steamer Lake Superior which sailed from here on Friday. In the gale on Friday a brakeman was blown from a box car at Sand Point and fell to the beach below, a distance of 30 feet.

No bones were broken.

The man who keeps his head cool and his feet warm has little to fear from pneumonia or kindred complaints. To keep the feet warm it is necessary to keep them dry, and this is more effectually done by the use of the Spanish glycerine oil liquid dressing than by the use of overshoes. The opening of the Victoria rink tomorrow evening will be the grandest event in its history. A commodious parlor, handsomely furnished, is one of the new attractions of this favorite resort. Country visitors should never miss spending an evening at the Victoria rink.

Fluctuations in the market are reported as follows by Messrs. George S. DeForest & Sons. Oatmeal is weaker and has declined 30 cents per barrel. Plate beef is firm at an advance of 50 cents per barrel. Dried fish is still coming in and has declined in price from 10 to 15 cents per 100 pounds. Evaporated apples are easier and the hout quality is quoted at 43 and 5 cents per pound. New crop nuts have arrived and are sold in sack lots as follows : Filberts 11 cents; S. By Grace Ethelwyn Cody.

"Come, darling come! Don't drag on mamma's hand." But the little prince had stopped short before an immense window full of dolls. He was a mannish little figure with the straight, dark blue coat buttoned almost to his ankles, and the close-fitting, wooly cap upon his head; but inside the coat was a white pique dress with lace and ruffles, and underneath the cap shown out a soft and dimpled baby face with full red, lips, and great, dark, starry eyes. It was the day before Christmas and the little prince's eyes had been growing larger all the afternoon. The store windows baby-awe and admiration. He had not learned to weary of it at all, to dread the rushing crowds, and to think bitter thoughts about money and the sweet things he would like to do. He simply wanted everything he saw, and when he found he could not have it he just forgot the want in some new wonder. Only these dolls, these gaily-dressed beautiful dolls-they were a different mat-

"Oh, precious!" she answered, trying to push on. "Mamma couldn't buy another thing to night. See, its getting dark, and papa will be home and think we're lost." Still he hung back, his lip quivering

She covered her face and wavy hair, and it was most important | with her hands. that his dressing gown should be exactly right. It was to have been so stylishbrown and green-the "very sweetest combination!" Besides that, was not the piece of velvet Bert's wife had taken to the tailor's much finer and better every way than the one he had put in? That settled it. She bundled up the dressing gown, took the little prince by the hand, and started for the tailor's. It was away down-town, but never mind, Of course the tailor was very sorry-of course it was a mistake. Of course it never would have happened, except for the Christmas rush, and of course it could not possibly be changed that day. Of course she would have to give it to her husband as it was and have it altered | to bed. "Of course you will alter it to-day and have it ready, as you promised, or, of course, I will not take it all," she answered, borrowing his own expression in rather a saucy way. The tailor looked at her determined face and changed his tone. They could change it and finish it that day, he admitted so much, but they positively could not promise to deliver the garment; so would it not be better, after all, to give it as it was, She cut him short. "Take it, and make t right. I will call for it myself when it

He knew she could not hold him with that bulky bundle in her arms. Besides, he knew the secret from papa about the gown. and he was going to keep it, too. Dear little prince! That was not his real name at all, but somehow it seemed to fit -he was such a royal little man. When they reached home, there was barely time to put away their wraps before Bert came and dinner was announced. It had been a hard day at the office, and Bert was tired, or he never would have noticed when the little prince insisted on his having his place at the table moved from the end around to "mamma's side." As it was he looked annoyed, though he

The little prince was hard to please that evening. He could not eat the bread that mamma had prepared because he "wanted to butter it himself," He threw a spoon across the table because it happened not to be the one marked with his name, and succeeded altogether in proving that his day's work had been far too heavy for his baby Bert was silent for the first ten minutes

Then, "My dear," he said, and his little wife knew instantly that what he meant to say would not be pleasant. "Do you think," he went on with a smile that was only half a smile, "that you are giving me a square deal in this matter?"

"I don't know what you mean," she said, constrainedly Beg pardon, but I think you do. As many times as I have told you how I enjoy our quiet dinners when we two are alone and as easy as it is for you to have that boy asleep before this time, it seems to me that "I don't-I don't !" the child went on. 'I wis' I didn't have him-he's so bad!" His sobs grew louder with every breath. "Little Prince," whispered mamma You will have to go away unless you stop. Mamma can't stay and let you cry like this."

"Call Bridget and let her take him and put him to bed," Bert proposed sharply. "No-no-no!" shrieked the child. " won't! I won't let her! Oh you bad, bad papa! "I always go with him, Bert, you know,"

said mamma. "Well, it's time he learned to go with, some one else." "Bert"-her eyes were pleading, but he did not meet them. "Bert, dear-its Christmas Eve."

"Yes and last Sunday it was Sunday want to-oh, I do!" The little mother found it hard enough to lift the struggling, screaming boy out of the chair to which he clung, and it was small wonder that during the operation one of his widely flying feet shot a glass of water from the table to crash in pieces on the hardwood floor. Bert started up. "I shall punish him for that!" he said.

The small woman put her child behind her. He clung to her, frightened into silence by the sound of the breaking glass. "You shall not even touch him while you are angry," she cried. "I shall punish my boy when I think "You shall never strike my baby while I

"But I can't love him, can I?" he heard in a baby voice, still broken with sobs. "Why, sweetheart, of course you love your own dear papa. "You don't love him-do you, mamma?" "Oh, yes, yes, yes. "And now, darling, tell mamma you are sorry for flying into such a rage and saying and doing all those naughty things." "I can't, mamma; I can't, 'thought I tell lies. It don't come into my heart to feel sorry-not a bit!"

Then the tender voice replied and went on and on so softly that Bert could not hear the words. He guessed that she was praying with the little culprit. Suddenly he heard: "It's come-it's here! Oh, mamma, it came right into my heart, and oh, I feel so sorry! I do-I am. -I didn't ought to say dose words an', It was close upon dinner time.
