society. I don't allow any set of men to "Dictate? Why, man! join it, and if you have a bright iden, the various members will be glad to have you dictate to them. I tell you, these photographers' conventions are a place where a man learns-an annual love-feast of the profession that every live man should attend. What are they? An aggregation of men with progressive ideas, eager for an interchange of sentiment, a great body that formulates the trivial ideas of the art into definite, centralized form, so as to devote time and attention to grander themes. You should attend just one convention! Here is a man with a paper on backgrounds-the result of careful thought, study and investigation. Here is another with specimens of flashlight work. It is studied, analyzed, it instructs, it gives new ideas, it makes you feel that you are not simply an isolated picture-taker, but one of a great body of active, intelligent men, who get out of themselves once a year in a harmonious exchange of sentiment and opinion, and return to routine work benefited, spurred on to do something great for the advance of art and the elevation and culture of the masses. The man who pretends to be an adept photographer, and is not a member of the association is certainly outside a charmed circle that to-day surrounds the world with a chain decked with the progress, however. Ah! the servants are stirring," he continued, as he neared the Le Britta advanced up the steps and rang the bell. The echoes had scarcely died away when the door was opened. Ralph Durand had answered his ring. His face was flushed with drink, his eyes heavy and dull, as if he had been making a night of it. He scowled darkly. Then his face lighted up with a cunning, sinister expression. "Good! The picture-taker!" he jeered. 'Ah! I understand. You are a quick actor, my friend. You came here to find otadys Vernon, my word. You traced her here? here, then?" breathed Le

"Yes, she is here, Come in. There is no use quarreling with you, for I see a way to settle the whole affair speedily. You won't call in a hurry again! Come in, I say!" And he led the way to the library. "Now, then, sit down."

Le Britta regarded his host uneasily—this reception of him boded no favorable results. There was a complacent, satisfied look in Durand's face that showed that he felt sanguine on some new development of affairs. He lit a cigar, dashed off a glass of liquor, and smiled familiarly and with insolent assurance at his unexpected "I'm right in supposing you have been looking for Gladys Vernon?" he
