THE MYSTERY OF

MR. AND MRS. PEACOCKE. Continued from 1st page.

"As for the paper," he said to himsen, walking quicker as his mind turned to this side of the subject, "as for the paper itself, it is beneath my notice. What is it to me what such a publication, or even the readers of it, may think of me? As for damages, I would rather starve than soil my hands with their money. Though it should succeed in ruining me, I could not accept redress in that shape." And thus having thought the matter fully over, he returned home, still wrathful, but with mitigated wrath.

A Saturday was fixed on which he should again go up to London to see the lawyer. He was obliged now to be particular about his days, as, in the absence of Mr. Peacocke, the school required his time. Saturday was a half-holiday, and on that day he could be absent on condition of remitting the classical lessons in the morning. As he thought of it all he began to be almost tired of Mr. Peacocke. Nevertheless, on the Saturday morning, before he started, he called on Mrs. Peacocke, in company with his wife, -and treated her with all his usual cordial kindness. "Mrs. Wortle," he said, "is going up to town with me; but we shall be home to-night, and we will see you on Monday

Mrs. Wortle was going with him, not with the view of being present at his interview with the lawyer, which she knew would not be allowed, but on the pretext of shopping. Her real reason for making the request to be taken up to town was, that she might use the last moment possible in mitigating her husband's wrath against the Bishop.

"I have seen one of the proprietors and the editor." said the lawyer, "and they are quite willing to apologise. I really believe they are very sorry. The words had been allowed to pass without being weighed. Nothing beyond an innocent joke was intended.

"I dare say. It seems innocent enough to them. If you throw soot at a chimney sweeper the joke is innocent, but very offensive when it is thrown at you." "They are quite aware that you have ground to complain. Of course you can go on if you like. The fact that they have offered to apologise will no doubt be a point in their favour. Nevertheless you would probably get a verdict." "We could bring the Bishop into

"I think so. You have got his letter speaking of the 'metropolitan press'?" "It is for you to think, Dr. Wortle, whether there would not be a feeling against you among clergymen." "Of course there will. Men in authority always have public sympathy with them in this country. No man more rejcices that it should be so than I do. But not the less is it necessary that now and again a man shall make a stand in his own defence. He should never have sent me that paper."

"Here," said the lawyer, "is the apology they propose to insert if you approve of it. They will also pay my bill,which, however, will not, I am sorry to say, be very heavy." Then the lawyer handed to the Doctor a slip of paper on which the following words were writ-

"Our attention has been called to a notice which was made in our impression of the-ultimo on the conduct of a clergyman in the diocese of Broughton. A joke was perpetrated which, we are sorry to find, has given offence where certainly no offence was intended. We have since heard all the details of the case to which reference was made, and are able to say that the conduct of the clergyman in question has deserved neither censure nor ridicule. Actuated by the purest charity he has proved himself a sincere friend to persons in great trouble."

"They'll put in your name if you wish it," said the lawyer, "or alter it in any way you like, so that they be not made to eat too much dirt."

"I do not want them to alter it," said the Loctor, sitting thoughtfully. "Their eating dirt will do no good to me. They are nothing to me. It is the Bishop." Then, as though he were not thinking of what he did, he tore the paper and threw the fragments down on the floor. "They "You will not accept their apology?"

"Oh yes; -or rather, it is unnecessary. You may tell them that I have changed my mind, and that I will ask for no apology. As far as the paper is concerned, it will be better to let the thing die a natural death. I should never have troubled myself about the newspaper if the Bishop had not sent it to me. Indeed I had seen it before the Bishop had sent it, and thought little or nothing of it, Animals will after their kind. The wasp stings and the polecat stinks, and the lion tears its prey asunder. Such a paper as that of course follows its own bent. One would have thought that a Bishop would have done the same."

"I may tell them that the action is "Certainly; certainly. Tell them also prefer to pay it myself. I will exerise no in truth have injured me." As he returned home he was not altogther happy, feel- the young man no encouragement. the decision to which he had come.

CHATPER XVI. -"IT IS IMPOS-SIBLE."

The absence of Dr. and Mrs. Wortle was peculiarly unfortunate on that afternoon, as a visitor rode over from a distance to make a call, -a visitor whom they both would have been very glad to welcome, but of whose coming Mrs. Wortle was not so delighted to hear when she was told by Mary that he had spent two or three hours at the rectory. Mrs. Wortle began to think whether the visitor could have known of her intended absence and the Boetor's. That Mary had not known that the visitor was coming she was quite cer-tain. Indeed, she did not really suspect the visitor, who was one too ingenuous in his nature to pre-concert so subtle and so we ked a scheme. The visitor, of course, had been Lord Carstairs.

"Was he here long?" asked Mrs. Wortle, "Two or three hours, mamma. He rode over from Buttercup, where he is staying for a cricket match, and of course I got "I should hope so," said the Doctor. "But I didn't think that Carstairs was so f nd of the Momson lot as all that." Mrs. Wortle at once doubted the declared purpose of this visit to Buttercup. Buttercup was more than half-way between Carstairs and Bowick.

"And then we had a game of lawntennis. Talbot and Monk came through to make sides." So much Mary told at once, but she did not tell more till she was alone with her mother.

Young Carstairs had certainly not come over on the sly, as we may call it, but nevertheless there had been a project in his mind, and fortune had favored him. He was now about nineteen, and had been treated for the last twelve months almost as though he had been a man. It had seemed to him that there was no possible reason why he should not fall in love as svell as another. Nothing more sweet, nothing more levely, nothing more iovable had expressed as to the young lord's visit, than Mary Wortle had he ever seen. He yet she was alive to the glory of having a had almost made up his mind to speak on two or three occasions before he left Bowick; but either his courage or the occasion had failed him. Once, as he was walking home with her from church, he to Oxford and take his degree before he had said one word;—but it had amounted thinks of such a thing. I shall be quite to nothing. She had escaped from him an old woman by that time, and he will Of Everything before she was bound to understand what have forgotten me. You may be sure he meant. He did not for a moment suppose that she had understood anything. He was only too much afraid that she regarded him as a mere boy. But when he had been away from Bowick two months he resolved that he would not be regarded as a mere boy any longer. Therefore he took an opportunity of going to Buttercup, which he certainly would not have done for the sake of the Momsons or for the sake of the cricket.

He ate his lunch before he said a word, and then, with but poor grace, submitted to the lawn-tennis with Talbut and Monk. Even to his youthful mind it seemed that told to the Doctor. If a gardener was seen Talbot and Monk were brought in on pur- idling his time, or a housemaid flirting pose. They were both of them boys he with the groom, that certainly would be had liked, but he hated them now. How- told to the Doctor. What comfort does a ever, he played his game, and when that woman get out of her husband unless she was over, managed to get rid of them, | may be allowed to talk to him about every sending them back through the gate to the | thing? When it had been first proposed school-ground.

"I think I must say good-by now, said Mary, "because there are so many her fear to the Doctor, -because of Mary things in the house which I have got to The Doctor had ridiculed her fears, and "I am going almost immediately," said "Papa will be so sorry not to have seen

This had been said once or twice before. "I came over," he said, "on purpose to

They were now standing on the middle of the lawn, and Mary had assumed a look which intended to signify that she expected him to go. He knew the place well enough to get his own horse, or to order the groom to get it for him. But instead of that, he stood his ground, and now declared his purpose. "To see me, Lord Carstairs!"

"Yes, Miss Wortle. And if the Doctor had been here, or your mother, I should have told them." "Have told them what?" she asked.

She knew: she felt sure that she knew; and yet she could not refrain from the "I have come here to ask if you can

It was a most decided way of declaring his purpose, and one which made Mary feel that a great difficulty was at once thrown upon her. She really did not know whether she could love him or not Why shouldn't she have been able to love him? Was it not natural enough that she should be able? But she knew that she ought not to love him whether able or not. There were various reasons which were apparent enough to her though it might be very difficult to make him see them. He was little more than a boy, and had not yet finished his education. His father and mother would not expect him to fall in love, at any rate till he had taken his degree. And they certainly would not expect him to fall in love with the daughter of his tutor. She had an idea that circumstanced as she was, she was bound by loyalty both to her own father and to the lad's father not to be able to love him.

ing able to love him, -she could not answer that at all. "Lord Carstairs," she said, severely, you ought not to have come here when papa and mamma are away." 'I didn't know they were away. I expected to find them here." "But they ain't. And you ought to go

She thought that she would find it easy enough to say that she did not love him;

"Is that all you can say to me?" "I think it is. You know you oughtn't to talk to me like that. Your own papa and manima would be angry if they knew

"Why should they be angry? Do you think that I shall not tell them?" "I am sure they would disapprove it altogether," said Mary. "In fact it is all nonsense, and you really must go away.' enter the house by the drawing-room win dow, which opened out on a gravel ter-

But he stopped her, standing boldly by the window. "I think you ought to a give me an answer, Mary," he said.

"I have; and I cannot say anything more You must let me go in." "If they say that it's all right at Carstair; then will you love me?" "They won't say that it's all right; and papa won't think that it's right. It's very wrong. You haven't been to Oxford yet and you'll have to remain there for three years. I think it's very ill-natured of you to come and talk to me like this. (. course it means nothing. You are only boy, but yet you ought to know better

"It does mean something; it means a great deal. As for being a boy, I am older than you are, and have quite as much right to know my own mind." Hereupon she took advantage of some little movement in his position, and, triping by him hastily, made good her escape into the house. Young Carstairs, perceiving that his occasion for the present was over, went into the yard and got upon his horse. He was by no means contented with what he had done, but still he thought that he must have made her understand his purpose.

Mary, when she found herself safe within her own room, could not refrain from asking herself the question which her lover had asked her. "Could she love him?" She didn't see any reason why she couldn't love him. It would be very nice, she thought, to love him. He was sweet-tempered, handsome, bright and thoroughly good-humored; and then his position in the world was very high. Not for a mo-ment did she tell herself that she would love him. She did not understand all the differences in the world's ranks quite as well as did her father, but still she felt that because of his rank, -because of his rank and his youth combined, -she ought not to allow herself to love him. There was no reason why the son of a peer should not marry the daughter of a clergyman. The peer and the clergyman might be equally gentlemen. But young Carstairs had been there in trust. Lord Bracy had sent him there to be taught Latin and Greek, and had a right to expect that he should not be encouraged to fall in love with his tutor's daughter. It was not that she did not think herself good enough to be loved by any young lord, but that she was too good to bring trouble on the people who had trusted her father. Her father would despise her were he to hear that she had encouraged the lad, or, as some might say, had entangled him. She did not know whether she should not have spoken to Lord Carstairs more decidedly. But that they will oblige me by putting in no she could, at any rate, comfort herself apology. And as for your bill, I would with the assurance that she had given him no encouragement. Of course, she must anger against them. It is not they who | tell it all to her mother, but in doing so could declare positively that she had given ing that the Bishop would escape him; "It was very unfortunate that Lord but he made his wife happy by telling her | Carstairs should have come just when I was away," said Mrs. Wortle to her daughter as soon as they were alone to-"Yes, mamma; it was." "And so odd. I haven't been away from home any day all the summer before." "He expected to find you." "Of course he did. Had he anything particular to say?"

"Yes, mamma."
"He had? What was it, my dear?"
"I was very much surprised, mamma, but I couldn't help it. He asked me--' "Asked you what, Mary?"
"Oh, mamma!" Here she knelt down and hid her face in her mother's lap. "Oh, my dear, this is very bad; -very

"It needn't be bad for you, mamma; or "Is it bad for you, my child?"

"No, mamma,—except of agures that I am sorry that it should be so." "What did you say to him?"

"Of course I told him that it was impossible. He is only a boy, and I told him "You made him no promise."

"No, mamma; no! A promise! Oh dear no! Of course it is impossible. knew that. I never dreamed of anything of the kind; but he said it all out there on

"Had he come on purpose?"
"Yes;—so he said. I think he had. But he will go to Oxford, and will of course

"He is such a nice boy," said Mrs. Wortle, who, in all her anxiety, could not but like the lad the better for having fallen in love with her daughter. "Yes, mamma; he is. I always liked But this is quite out of the ques What would his papa and mamma

"It would be very dreadful to have a quarrel, wouldn't it?-and just at present when there are so many things to trouble your papa." Though Mrs. Wortle was quite honest and true in the feeling she young lord for her son-in-jaw. "Of course it is out of the question mamma. It has never occurred to me for a moment as otherwise. He has got to go mamma, that whatever I did say to him was quite plain. I wish you could have been there and heard it all, and seen it

"My darling," said the mother, em-bracing her, "I could not believe you more thoroughly eyen though I saw it all, and That night Mrs Wortle felt herself con strained to tell the whole story to har hus band. It was indeed impossible for her t. keep any secret from her husband. When Mary, in her younger years, had torn her frock or cut her finger, that was always that Lord Carstairs should come into the house as a private pupil, she had expressed this had been the result. Of course sin must tel the Doctor. "Oh dear, ' sh said, "what do you think has happened while we were up in London?"

"Carstairs was here" "Oh yes, he was here. He came on purpose to make a regular declaration of love to Mary."

"Nonsense." "But he did, Jeffrey." "How do you know he came on pur-"He told her so."

"I did not think the boy had so much spirit in him," said the Doctor. This was a way of looking at it which Mrs. Wortie had not expected. Her husband seemed rather to approve than otherwise of weat had been done. At any rate, he had expressed none of that loud horror which she had expected. "Nevertheless," continued

"I don't know that he is a fool," said Mrs. Wortle. "Yes, he is. He is not yet twenty, and he has all Oxford before him. How did

Mary behave?" "Like an angel," said Mary's mother "That's of course. You and I are bound | age 25cts. to believe so. But what did she do, and what did she say?" "She told him that it was simply impossible." "So it is .- I'm afraid. She at any rate was bound to give him no encourage-"She gave him none. She feels quite strongly that it is altogether impossible. What would Lord Bracy say?' "If Carstairs were but three or fou! years older," said the Doctor, proedly 'I.ord Bracy would have much to be thankful for in the attachment on the part of his son, if it were met by a return affection on the part of my daughter

"But he is only a boy," said Mrs but that was not the question. As for be-Wortle. "No; that's where it is. And Mary wa quite right to tell him that it is impos sible. It is impossible. And I trust, fo her sake, that his words have not touched her young heart." "Oh no," said Mrs. Wortle.

What better could he want?"

"Had it been otherwise, how could we have been angry with the child?" Now this did seem to the mother to b very much in contradiction to that which the Doctor had himself said when she had whispered to him that Lord Carstairs's coming might be dangerous. "I was afraid of it, as you know," said she. "His character has altered during the last twelve months." "I suppose when boys grow into men it is so with them."

Eton is not generally thinking of these "A boy at Eton is not thrown into such society," said Mrs. Wortle "I suppose his being here and seeing Mary every day has

"Poor Mary!" "I don't think she is poor at ail," said Mary's mother. "I am afraid she must not dream of her young lover." "Of course she will not dream of him. She has never entertained any idea of the kind. There never was a girl with less nonsense of that kind than Mary. When Lord Carstairs spoke to her to-day, I do not suppose she had thought about him more than any other boy that has been "But she will think now."

"No:-not in the l ast. She knows it is mpossible.' "Nevertheless she will think about it And so will you."

"Yes, -why not? Why should you be different from other mothers? Why should I not think about it as other father might do? It is impossible. I wish i were not. For Mary's sake, I wish I were three or four years older. But he i as he is, and we know that it is impossible Nevertheless it is natural that she should think about him. I only hope that sh will not think about him too much." So saying he closed the conversation

Mary did not think very much abour "it" in such a way as to create disappointment. She at once realized the impossi bilities, so far as to perceive that th young lord was the too brick of the chimney as far as she was concerned. The to; brick of the chimney may be very desir able, but one doesn t cry for it, because it is unattainable. Therefore Mary did no: in truth think of loving her young lover He had been to her a very nice boy; and so he was still. That;-that, and nothing more. Then had come this little episode in her life which seemed to lend it a gentle tinge of romance But had she inquired of her bosom she would have declared that she had not been in love. With her mother there was perhaps something of regret. But it was exactly the regret which near be felt in reference to the top brick. It would have been so sweet had it been possible; but then it was so evidently impos

With the Doctor the feeling was somewhat different. It was not quite so manifest to him that this special brick was altogether ugattainable, nor even that it was quite the top of the chimney. There was no reason why his daughter should not marry an earl's son and heir. No doubt the lad had been confided to him in trust. No doubt it would have been his cuty to have prevented anything of the kind, had anything of the kind seemed to him to be the Earl to take his son away from Meyersburg, Ont., writes: the kind. He had acted in the simplicity of his heart, and this had been the result. Of course it was impossible. He acknowledged it himself that it was so, because of the necessity of those Oxford studies and those long years which would be required for the taking of the degree, But to his thinking there was no other ground for saying that it was impossible. The thing must stand as it was. If this youth should show himself to be more constant than other youths, -which was not prob abig, -and if, at the end of three or four years, Mary should not have given her heart to any other lover,—which was also improbable,—why t'en, it might come to pass that he should s me day find himself father-in-law to the future Earl Bracy Though Mary did not think of it nor Mrs Wortle, he thought of it, -so as to give an

Shanty, Camp and Boat Stove.

IFrom Miramichi Advance of Oct 11.]

Mr George Marquis of Chathem will be looked upon as a benefactor of smelt fishermen, sportsmen and others who may have the good fortune to procure stoves of the new pattern designed by him the first sample of which was put together at his well known shop at Chatham on Tuesday afternoon and shipped yesterday to Neguae It is to be used in a roose-shooter's cump at Tabusintae and for that purpose as well as for heating and cooking in smelt-fisherments chanties it is just the thing it is about 20 inches long, 14 inches from front to back and the same from bottom to top The bottom, top, door and dampers, etc are of cast iron and the sides and ends are composed of a sheet of 16 gauge sides and ends are composed of a sheet of 16 gange sheet steel. It will hold nearly twice as much wood as a star stove while owing to a new and peculiar form adopted in the bottom, it will burn either a form adopted in the bottom, it will burn either a small or large quantity of fuel, as may be desired It may also be fitted to hurn coal. There is a draft for forcing the tire and a damper for lessening the heat at will. The top has two pot-holes and these may, by the removal of the dividing centre-piece, which is of the usual form, be converted into an oblong hole for a big boiler or oblong pan. Altogether, the new shanty-stove seems to meet a requirement, that is more than local, and the cost requirement that is more than local, and the cost, $5, places it within almost everbody's ability to buy it Mr Marquis has just began to all orders, and it will be well for those who intend to fish sinel's during the coming winter, as well as sportsmen and gunners who want to be comfortable and, at the same time, have a stove on which they can do quite a range of cooking to place their orders with hin, as early as possible.

The undermentioned advantages are claimed for MacKenzie's spectacles.

1st-That from the peculiar construction of the glasses they Assist and PRESERVE the sight, rendering frequent changes unnecessary. 2nd—That they confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision, with an amount of Ease and Comfort not hitherto enjoyed by spectacle 3rd-That the material from which the Lenses are ground is manufactured especially for optic purposes, by Dr. Charles Bardou's mproved patent method, and is PURE, HARD AND BRILLIANT and not fliable to become scratched. 4th-That the frames in which they are set, whether in Gold, Silver or Steel, are of the finest quality and finish, and guaranteed perfect in
