PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

The State of Maine, however, affords a much better illustration of what prohibition can and cannot do than any of our Provinces, and it, besides, is the place to which prohibitionists point with greatest confidence. During the early part of the Maine was, perhaps, the most century dranken State in the Union. A recoil, essentially religious in its origin, began in 1826, which reached its climax in the course of the next 15 years. Total abstinence became a popular enthusiasm all over the State. As early as 1831 the official year-book of the State said that "the quantity of ardent spirits consumed Maine has been reduced two-thirds within three years." The idea of prohibition never entered the minds of those early reformers. The Washingtonian movement, whose achievements is suppressing intemperance were enthusiastically celebrated in popular songs, reached Maine in 1840, but neither did it dream of prohibition. As one of the leaders said in 1841 ; "Washingtonians are firm believers in the efficacy and power of moral suasion ; this they believe to be the main lever; they hold that doctrine to be unsound which includes the principle of coercion, and therefore they cannot go hand in hand with those who cry out 'give us the strong arm of the law."" Human nature, however, is impatient, and success is apt to make it intolerant. It loves shortcuts, Maine enacted a prohibitory law in 1846. What has been the result? In the balf century that has since elapsed 50 amendments have been called for, to meet the evasions and the difficulties attending Desmond building, next door to the Teleattempts at enforcing the law ! Just as men who have drunk too much are thirsty and cry "more brandy," so the Maine prohibitionists have never ceased to cry for Point yesterday and the weather as we go "nore law." Let me refer all who are to press is so mild that a break-up of the ice interested in a study of the Maine liquor laws, and indeed of the whole question, to an admirable volume entitled "The Liquor Problem in its Legislative Aspects," which gives the results of a careful, thorough and impartial investigation, under the direction of the most eminent educational and social reformers in the United States. "Advance" Subscribers do not Require to be Dunned.

It's a little on the mean side for newspaper publishers to be prodding their subscribers with reminders through their columns that they ought to pay up. It is the better way to follow the ADVANCE'S plan and let the address slip on each week's paper either give the subscriber the satisfaction of seeing that he has either done or neglected his duty, as the case may be. On the yellow slip on this copy of the ADVANCE there is a date which shows the exact time to which the subscriber has paid. and that is all that is necessary. A paper should not be a dunning medium.

The Dons Should be Uneasy.

A despatch of 8th inst. from Havana says :-- The famous floating dock, procured in England at great expense by the Spanish government and brought to Havana for use particularly in the event of war with the United States, began to sink slowly on last Monday, and is now beneath the waters of the bay. The unexpected disappearance of the dock has eaused a great deal of trouble in the navy department and in the palace of the captain general. Just now the floating dock is not floating. It went down slowly and majestically, and nobody knows what was the matter with it. The Spanish naval engineers, probably to conceal their own ignorance of their science, cry aloud that fraud was perpetrated in England, the Spanish government hav ing been deceived in the purchase of the dock. But others say that the dock came from England in good condition and that something fatal was done to it in Havana.

caused by "Cuban conspirators." It is sail that the whole business of the dock has cost the Spanish government about $1,000,000. It was fortunate for Havana that it sank so slowly. If it had going elsewhere as we are in a gone down suddenly there would probably position to supply your wants.
