

The Diamond Coterie.

(Continued from 1st page.) "The name of Sir Herbert Heathcliffe is, no doubt, unknown to all here... "I judge then, that you must have possessed a pass key?" "I did."

"How did you dispose of that key?" "I think it was lost; it has been out of my possession for some time."

"I have visited the office very seldom of late, and since using the key, in the absence of Doctor Heath..." "Yes, my key was never than his, and brighter."

"I think it is not my purpose to follow step by step the downward career of my brother Herbert, only such of his misdeeds as affected Clifford need be brought forward here."

"I have said that Herbert was a spendthrift. He was perpetually borrowing of Clifford, and always in debt."

"When Clifford, who had a monomania for the medical profession, announced his intention to go to Germany and pursue his studies there, the first trouble came."

"Herbert, who for his own selfish ends, wished to keep Clifford and his purse nearer Cliffe Towers, incited my brother to oppose the scheme. This was easy."

"I do not dwell on what followed; Bathurst is a keen detective; he vindicated my brother, Clifford, and placed the key in my hands."

"I had."

"I had."

"I had."

"I had."

"I had."

"I had."

"I had."
