Author of "Doctor Jack's Wife," "Captain Tom," "Baron Sam," "Miss Pauline of New York," "Miss Caprice," Etc.

By ST. GEORGE RATHBORNE,

All danger to the man is not yet Abdallah Pasha, he knows that this past, and he does not deceive himself. day's work has gained for him the This brute is to be feared until the hatred of an unscupulous prince, who last vital spark is drawn from his will descend to any depth in order to body. Before that time comes, Doctor Jack means to show the good people of Madrid how their cousins in Mexico carry on a bull-fight. Instead of rushing at him now, toro advances with lowered head, as though hoping to come in contact with his foe. He has become blown, and even the chulos could keep out of his way now. Some of these worthies make a move as though to leave their perch upon the barrier, seeing which, Jack roars

"Keep back, you cowards! This is my game !" His manner, more than the words he utters, give them warning, and if this is not sufficient, the storm of hisses from the audience declares that such interference with the just rights of the bull-fighter will not be tolerated. Doctor Jack has tamed the beast, ly cal! for the American, to which apand his must be the glory of the final sacrifice. They once more climb the fence, and watch the work of the man in the arena jealously.

Never since the days of Montes or upon a scent the equal of this. Jack is determined to do the thing up in good style now that he has entered the game. He cares little for the apbarrier and faced this terror of a black with pleasure a suggestion from Don toro, but he hopes Meredes is satisfled now. He seems to once more hear the Spanish beauty say with that disguise. Again comes the now wearied bruite. It is nearly time for the final stroke, but ere delivering it Doctor Jack ventures upon a trick he remembers playbefore an audience in the land of the prickly pear and cactus.

Jack, in the jam, enof the sudden opportunity, Jack, with a light spring, has vaulted to his back, where he stands for a few seconds waving the muleta, to the intense my stification of the puzzled bull and the delight of the Spanish audience, who, forgetting that the brave matador is a foreigner, give vent to their approval in a whirlwind of shouts and clapping

Then Jack drops lightly to the ground and makes ready for the final work. He knows his audience, and how far show goes with these people of impulse, so he rolls up the right sueeve of his shirt for business, showing the wonderful arm that has already this day elicited words of admiration from Don Carlos.

All readily guess his motive in doing this. He desires to warn them that the time has come for that seran ann the time has come for serious work, and begs them to keep silent in order that his attention be not distracted at the trying moment. The shouts cease. Again an ominous silence spreads about the amphitheater.

All is now ready. Muleta in one when comparing the animals of the Doctor Jack advances toward his adin the eyes of the bull, and tantalizing him to his death. He is no coward. just as Jack has planned.

As the American slips away a dozen feet, and waving the flag, plants himself for business, the black bull lumpers forward, shorn of much of his former activity, but still determined to carry the war into Africa.

Not once has the red flag deceived him, and on this occasion, too, he heads direct for the man. Jack has fully expected such a thing, and hence | tic mind finds enough for a long conis not caught napping. Just before that heavy set head reaches him he steps aside. His eye has marked the spot where he means to press the no novice in the study of anatomy, and knows just where to find the heart every time. So the point of Pedro Vasquez's sword presses upon the black satin skin, vanishes from view and a foot of the weapon is buried in great beast pushes on a yard or so stops, trembles, staggers-a mighty shout seems to make the very ground quake-the terible bull is down-blood issues from his mouth-the Toledo blade has snapped off under his weight but half of it remains buried in his quivering body, and the deadly point has undoutedly pierced his heart. When danger menaced him, Doctor

In the midst of the wild plaudits that greet valiant work, he does not for an of mind. Bending down, he secures the broken sword, places one foot upon the still struggling but dying anin al, makes a proud bow in the direction of the governor-general, after which he lays his course for the barriers, leaping the outer one in a manner that pleases the people. In another minute he has regained his place and resumed his outer garments. Save the fact that he is breathing hard, no one would see anything about him to tell of the encounter which he has just figured in as the leading character. Don Carlos bends over and squeezes his hand, uttering warm praises, but Doctor Jack hardly knows whether they come from his heart or not.

There is a something in Senor Catalina's eyes and face that gives the lie Mercedes says nothing, but if looks can convey the language of the soul, then is her silence eloquent indeed. Here almost all of the old masters are represented, from Rubens and Murillo to Raphael, and the artis

You see, Jack's artistic education has been neglected, and as a general thing he sees through the eyes of the nineteenth century, and not with glasses three hundred years old, which accounts for his love of nature, and repugnance of gloomy paintings, no matter how valuable. In front of one, however, he does stand entranced-it is a Murillo-" Rebecca at the Well." The colours of garments and features, the well with its bucket, the maidens in the foreground with their loveliness of form, ed Oriental attendants farther back, attending to the camels, make a bright scene that holds the eye of the most ordinary observer.

As Jack turns to make some remark to his companion, he comes face to face with the man whose glance he caught at the bull-fight-the Turk. This time he gives as good as he receives. The pasha stops and speaks to Mercedes. Jack's eyes are upon her, and he notes a singular fact. The pasha, in excellent English, makes a remark about the dexterity of the American in regard to killing a bull, and what a foothold he already has upon the ladder of fame if he cares to carry on the business, to which Jack, unruffled, replies that he had rather practice his skill upon something more human than bulls, and has a mission in life a little above the feat of living upon the plaudits of a fickle Spanish audience at a bull-fight. Just at this moment Dector Jack's eyes, in ranging past the pasha, fell upon something that gives him a start. It is a face-one such as Mur-

He was looking for Perhaps, in comparison with the wonderful features of Mercedes, this American girl could not be called beautiful, but there is something better about her features-they are ful of expression, animation, and life. One might go a long way without discovering a face that can compare with

These two are the opposites of nature as revealed in womankind-the one with olive-coloured, valvet skip magnificent features, hair and eyes as black as midnight, real figure, and the jealcusies characteristic of the Latin race; the other fair, frank, fearless full of love for a frolic, tender if need be, but always her own true self What a choice for a man.
