about the room, not overturning or handling, simply observing closely; then he "Now, I think I am done here. We will go down, if you please, and I will give you the benefit of my conjectures.' He put the bottle and the piece of linen in his pocket, and turns from the room. Instinctively he takes the lead, instinctively they follow, naturally according him the leadership. When they are once more seated, he turns to Constance. "They gave you a very light dose of chloroform, Miss Wardour. "Very light," she replies; "and that was most fortunate for me. "How fortunate?"

"Allow me to explain," interrupts Doctor Heath. "Miss Wardour possesses one of those peculiar constitutions upon which all opiates act with disastrous effect. It is forunate that a cautious hand-I was about to say a skilled hand -administered the drug. I could swear that not the half of an ordinary dose was given her, for a full dose would have is to the right, and he would naturally prostrated her for days; and the quantity it would require to make you or me sleep soundly for half the night, would kill her outright.

"Ah!" says the detective, softly, to himself. "Ah-h-h!" "Now, I wonder;" it is Mrs. Aliston who speaks. "I wonder how in the world you knew that they had given my niece "Very easily, madame. The phial is very small, and it is now near two-

"That, indeed!" murmurs Mrs. Aliston, feeling somehow extinguised, while the others smile at his simple explana-"And now," says the detective, "for my deductions. First, then, the robbers did not enter these grounds last night for the first time. They did not enter the library at random, or because that window could be easily forced. They, whoever they were, knew their grounds, not only from without, but from within. The disturbance in the library is only a ruse—the robbers wanted nothing, knew they should find nothing, there. They were not amateurs; yet, somehow, in this case, they bungled somewhat in their work. Before they approached this house, everything was planned, and all was done as planned. They were systematic, therefore successful; and yet-they bungled. They came by the river-came in a boat, with oars muffled; they came by the footpath over the river slope, and entered your garden by leaping the fence just below the gate, which was locked. Then they followed the footpaths through the shrubbery, and straight to that library window. They came there because they knew it to be the library wincow, and they wished to cross the library because they knew that from the door of that room they stepped at once upon the stairs, thus having the nearest, easiest and safest route to Miss Wardour's rooms. Either they found her door unlocked, or they were prepared with skeleton keys. Was the door locked, Miss Wardour?" "It was locked. They then used a skeleton key, entered, and knowing just the proportion of chloroform Miss War-dour could bear, they administered it carefully, secured the booty without further trouble, and made their escape without detection.' No remarks from his listeners. They sit amazed, incredulous, admiring, yet speechless.

"Now, I see I had better prove my statements," goes on Mr. Bathurst, looking from one to another with a smile of easy superiority. "Miss Wardour is beginning to think that I do belong to the CRACKED FEED, godmother species, and yet, it's all very

"No doubt," retorts Doctor Heath, drily; "yet we are willing to endure your simple explanation. "I say the robbers came by the river," continues the detective. "Before sundown I sauntered along the river bank; tomorrow I can show you traces, indistinct but sufficient, to prove that a boat has been drawn out of the water, and overturned upon the grass; keel, prow and oar-locks have left their traces. There is also the print of a clubbed and muffled oar, above the water mark, where an im patient hand has pushed off the boat. Here is blunder number one. All these traces might have been avoided or oblit-

He pauses a moment, but his listeners sit, a very respectful audience, and are inclined neither to question or argue. So he continues:-"I said that the robbers entered purposely at that particular window, and because they were familiar with the interior of the house. Now I have examined all of the windows of this floor, and I find that a person unfamiliar with the inside of the building, and not aware which of the upper rooms were occupied. would have chosen differently. The dining-room windows, from with out, would seem much more inviting; still more, the drawing-room windows. Naturally, our burglars would select a window which was tolerably easy of access, and where they knew there was the least chance of being overheard and observed from above. Now, the diningroom windows are close to the ground, and the awnings cut off all chance for observation from above; but-they knew that Miss Wardour's coachman sleeps in a small room just in the rear of the dining-room." This was too much for Mrs. Aliston. "Now, how did you find that out?" she asks, with staring eyes.

replies. "Oh, I am quite familiar with things about here. The very best place for a burglar to operate would be these ACEA? | for a burglar to operate would stand in of the drawing room; "he could stand in comfort on the lower balcony, screened by the upper, and cut away at shutters and panes; but, our burglars knew that Miss Wardour's rooms were directly above, and that Miss Wardour is a light sleeper. Now, the very place that would be shunned by an unfamiliar robber, is this very library window; it is higher than the others, has a little

"From my friend, the gardener," he knew that not one of these rooms to which the six windows belong, are occupied; and that the servants all sleep on the opposite side of the house. Now, then, I say that the robbers knew Miss Wardour's sensitiveness to the effects of chloroform; how else can we account for the fact of their giving just enough to cause her to sleep, and not enough to cause any unpleasant after effects. We can call it a coincidence, but it is one not likely to happen; Doctor Heath knows that." "True," responds Doctor Heath; "in a matter of this sort one would hardly be likely to make so fortunate a blunder, or

The detective pauses a moment, and then concludes: "My reasons for saying that the robbers entered the garden by leaping the low fence just below the gate, are, first, that gate creaks loudly when opened or shut, and they knew this, and therefore avoided it; and, second, one of them, the heavier of the two, came over with sufficient force to leave the imprint of his right boot heel in the ground. It was the right heel, because the deepest side of the indentation strike the ground with the weight resting on the outside of the foot; and here, my friends, as the lawyers have it, I rest

"And a very clear case it looks," says "How easily and naturally you come at these things," exclaims Constance, in admiration. "It is a, b, c, to you, but it's awful Greek to the rest of us. I begin to think detectives are born, not made.'

"You think right, Miss Wardour," replies Bathurst. "It is the made detectives who spoil and disgrace our profession. "But," says Constance, with a look of anxiety upon her face; "I am sorry to have it proved that this thing was done by some of our people. I am reluctant to institute a search that may implicate some poor man whose wife and children may live in our very town. The detective laughs softly. "There it is," he exclaims. "An amateur must always judge by what appears uppermost. We detectives, as a rule, always distrust the most plausible theory. Now look, a skilled burglar is a man of many resources; a burglar studies his business as I study mine. You have no idea how much misapplied talent goes roaming about of nights with a jimmy and a dark lantern. Now let us suppose this case. A professional burglar in the course of his wanderings, hears, as would be quite natural, of the immense value of the Wardour diamonds, and he desires to possess them. Now it's a great prize, and he goes to work with his utinost care. He has confederates; they come, one or all, and manage to gain the necessary information; they may come as tramps, peddlars, what not; a talkative servant, a gossiping neighbor, like Mrs. Malloy, informs Mrs. Gray, through the medium or fragments of information picked up of his ten fingers, that she is dismissed here and there may help them to get the 'lay of the land;' they may even have entered the house, probably have, and it may have been last month, or last year; our burglar nourishes his job and studies it carefully. Finally he is ready; he strikes; he succeeds. I do not say this is the case, understand; I simply put it as a thing possible; and quite as probable as that the thieves are here in W-." Constace muses; she is thinking of various other depredations committed in and about W-; and, as once before she recounted them to Doctor Heath, she enumerates them now, and closes by say-Your burglars keep a sharp eye on us, at all events, Mr. Bathurst.'

"Naturally," assents the detective: 'W- is a capital field for that sort of chap. It's a mine of itself, and I will always receive due attention from the law breakers. By the by, Miss Wardour, these facts you mention are worth noting; after considering, I think I will remain in W- during to-morrow. I want to explore about the river, and about this place, a little more. If I may see you to-morrow I would like your version of these other older robberies. I keep a record of every crime reported, and, no doubt, have each of these upon my register, but not as I would receive them from you. I do not wish to be seen or known, as acting in this matter; your friend will be here to-morrow, or Monday, and the officer he has chosen should be on the ground before to-morrow morning. No doubt he will be all that you wish for, and my duties will call me elsewhere very soon.'

Then they all rise, and standing in a group begin talking. They so much regret that they can not retain his services, and they are very grateful to him for so much light as he has thrown upon the subject of the robbery. n mind that you have no light; you are in total darkness and ignorance; tomorrow you will have a new officer, he may evolve a totally different theory. Then discard mine, or not, as you think fit; in any case, let it be kept exclusively to your three selves, for I am very likely to make a second appearance here. I think that these burglars of yours are the chaps I am wanting. And, Miss Wardour, this reminds me," drawing from his pocket the chloroform vial wrapped in its accompanying linen bit, "may I Warranted J. Pallen & Son. keep this until morning? I will return it to you by Doctor Heath, and, if your officer is not too much in the way, will try and see you in person, if you will kindly give me what facts you can recall Robes, etc., etc. concerning those robberies. Constance expresses a hope that the officer will not be in the way, and after they have talked a little more, the detective repeating his cautions. Constance repeating her regret that he is not to take the case, as her case; and Mrs. Aliston repeating everything that comes into her head, they separate, and the two men, looking so oddly unlike, go out into the night. Mrs. Aliston is ready to talk, but Constance is in no mood to listen. She cuts her aunt's elocution, and goes with listless weariness to her own apartments. Since the appearance of the detective, a shade of perplexity rested on her face, and over and over again her thoughts have repeated the question which now falls from her lips. "What does it mean? I am not mis-

in silence down the wide shrub-bordered walk, to the spot where the doctor's horse awaited him. Here the detective paused suddenly and listened a moment. "We should not be seen together," he said in a low tone. "Do you mount your horse and ride on slowly. I will follow.

"No buts; I can follow you, never fear; that's my business; do you go straight home and prepare to admit me on the quiet. Stay-have you any gelatine?"

"Any plaster of Paris?" "Any wax?"

"Ony a small quantity." "Too bad; I must have some. There will be a drug store open?" "At this hour? oh, yes."

standing in his open doorway, wondering what had become of the detective, when a light touch upon his shoulder caused him to start suddenly, and turning, he saw the man for whom he watched, standing behind him, and within the dimly-lighted hall. "Are we alone?" whispered the detective; "is the coast clear?" "Quite clear; but how the mischief did you get in there, man?"

"Through the door," replied Bathurst, as he followed his host into a cozy parlor, where a shaded lamp burned. "You are not a good sentinel; why, I all but brushed you; have you no sense of feeling, then; why, man, I can recognize a pear presence in the darkest room." "Now that I think of it," retorts the doctor, maliciously, "I did feel a queer sensation in the ends of my thumbs. Make yourself at home now; take that chair," rolling a comfortable-looking monster close to the round table; "there are segars and-why-I say man, have you eaten any thing since you started on "Now you mention it, I distinctly recollect, that I have not." "Of course not; I will wake up Mrs.

"Pray don't; I couldn't think of eating Mrs. Gray.' "Nonsense!" laughs his host; "Mrs. Gray is my housekeeper, and she is deaf as a post. "Well, that's a comfort, the deafness.

Is she dumb, too?" GOOD STABLING, &C. "Unfortunately, no; but as I have not been home to dine, she will think she is preparing my supper, and I will tell her you are a patient come to be treated, and that I am going to give you a bed; here," tossing something which he finds upon a bookcase, across to his guest, "tie you face up in that rag, before she comes in. She will not give you a second glance; she never troubles her head about my patients." So saying, he goes out, and the detec-

"Very comfortable quarters," he muttered, looking about him. "Luxurious too; quite so. Our doctor has not forgotten how people ought to live.' The doctor's "quarters" were all that he described them.
