ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

St. Patrick, whose work as a wonder
Is the theme of oration and song,
Was a diligent, true son of thunder
In an age of oppression and wrong,
While the doctrine of loving each other
Lay dormant and dead from its birth,
And no man called his fellow his brother
On the face of God's beautiful earth;

While envy and terror and battle
Drove men to the brink of despair,
Reduced them to dumb driven cattle
On the plane of the beast in his lair,
This shepherd and son of the mountain,
In prayer, 'neath the sunset of even,
Slaked his thirst at Jehovah's own fountain,
Lit his lamp at the altar of heaven.

That bright little isle of the ocean,
Old Erin, the home of the brave,
Still remembers St. Patrick's devotion
And treasures the gift that he gave,
And her sons in the deepest recesses
Of civilization and fame
Come forth on this day with their tresses
And weave a bright wreath for his name.
—Thomas Baird.

LADY MONTAGU'S SHAMROCK.

BY JOHN J. O'SHEA.

[Copyright, 1897, by the Author.]

On St. Patrick's day, in the year of grace 1867, only a little crowd mustered on Cork hill to watch the time honored military pageant called the trooping of the colors. Lady Montagu, as she drove up to the castle gates in her magnificent carriage and pair, appeared to be quite disappointed. Turning to her handsome escort, Major Lascelles of the Horse Guards Blue, she said, with a coquettish attempt at a frown: "And is this the great mirth provoking spectacle you have promised me—the crowd of mad revelers and noisy wits? Why, Major Lascelles, these poor creatures look more like mourners than merrymakers!"

"Your ladyship is unquestionably right," replied the officer. "I must plead guilty to a great mistake. I forgot that there had been an abortive insurrection this year. The people are sullen. I suppose they do not like the idea of their leaders being in prison awaiting trial."

"Very naturally. If that is the explanation, I respect them for it, my dear major. You told me that they advanced before the vice regal people and made an exhibition of themselves when the lord lieutenant and his party flung sixpences in the gutter for them to pick up."

SHE DID NOT WISH TO COMMIT HERSELF.

"And I have seen some of them do it, your ladyship, on other Patrick's days. They used to dance and demonstrate in the castle yard until we were tired watching their fooling."

"You gave me a wrong idea of an Irish crowd, I must say," replied the disappointed beauty. "I've seen people at Epsom races behave like fantastic idiots, and they were London people mostly."

Major Lascelles looked a little sheepish. It was no light matter for him to have the rich and beautiful Lady Montagu, the cynosure of the court circle, find that she had been misled even in so small a thing as this by his assurances.

"Appearances are sometimes misleading, your ladyship," he began to stammer, when his confusion was relieved by the stoppage of the coach and the sound of a high pitched male voice, rich with the raciest of Liffey brogues, calling:

"Green shamrocks, sweet lady! Will you buy a shamrock to make you purtier?"

He saw that Lady Montagu smiled, while her eyes and her parted lips betrayed a sort of pleased curiosity. Mentally he blessed the winsome face and the musical twang which had brought so welcome a diversion.

The extended hand—a small yet not overclean one—held up temptingly a pretty bunch of Ireland's legendary symbol. He looked inquiringly at the fair face beside him.

"Yes," said Lady Montagu, "I will take the shamrock, and, what's more, I'll wear it today."

A look of astonishment for an instant flashed from the major's eyes, but there was something in the face of the imperious beauty beside him that checked the exclamation he was about to utter. It was widely known that Lady Montagu was willful and in her moods did freakish things that made the fashionable world lift its eyebrows in mild surprise.

Opposite were the iron gates of the castle. Two scarlet coated soldiers held them open, ready to close them as soon as the equipage had passed inside.

The driver whipped his horses on, and the vender of the shamrocks was nearly swept under the wheels, so sudden was the movement. She was agile, fortunately, and quickly sprang to the curbstone, running after the vehicle till the iron gates and the peremptory "Halt!" of the armed sentry stopped her.

"Please let the woman in," said Lady Montagu, speaking to the guard from the carriage window as they prepared to close the gates. "I wish to have a bunch of shamrocks."

The guards looked at each other, smiling, but hesitating. They had strict orders to admit none of the crowd.

"It is all right, men," said Major Lascelles authoritatively. "Do as the lady wishes."

His uniform, the rich one of field officer of the Queen's household troops, known, for they received her pleasantly, and she had no difficulty in wheedling them into buying some of her vergant wares.

"Sure, it's against the rules," said one of them, "to wear the blessed flower, but you'd coax the birds off the bushes, Nelly O'Dowd, with them cherry lips and sky blue eyes of yours."

"No matter," replied the laughing maiden roguishly. "Sure, you'll be 'drawing your shamrock' when you get off duty, and how could you do that, I'd like to know, unless you had the shamrock to drown?"

The men laughed heartily at this conundrum. Nelly O'Dowd was astute enough to seize the advantage their good humor afforded her.

"Can't I go in to see the chief," she said in her most seductive tones, "just for a moment only? Who knows but I might get a half crown from him for one of my bunches of shamrock?"
