The Diamond Coterie*

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH

(E. M. Van Deventer) Author of "A Woman's Crime," "John Arthur's Ward," "The Lost Witness," "A Slender Clue," "Dangerous Ground," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

"In a field to the northward, I have and admitted Nelly, who said in a low found what may be. I think is, a trace of the robbers. Two or more men have leaped a ditch, running across the field from east to west; and the footmarks in the first instance are coming southward. or toward Wardour. These footmarks are within a few rods of the road, as if the parties had suddenly abandoned that highway, fearing observation from travelers. My supposition is, that they approached Wardour Place, keeping to the field, after having leaped the ditch, until the northern boundary of the orchard was reached; here they must have kept close under the wall, until they came to the roadside fence, which they climbed. The fence bears freshly scraped marks, as if made by boot heels in climbing over, and some tall weeds, growing by the roadside, give evidence of having been hastily and heavily trampled. The thieves probably returned after the robbery, in the same way; for, one crossing of the fence would not have left so many marks | go away in ignorance, and yet," turning visible, either on the boards or among the weeds; and in the darkness they fell a little eastward of their first course; for I find, at the ditch again, but nearer to he river, the same footprints where the ditch has been leaped, this time the footsteps going northward. "It is probable that the thieves tramped northward under cover of the darkness, until they struck the railroad at some previously selected point, and from thence took the first train cityward.' The reading came thus abruptly to an end, and the reader looked up to note the effect upon Lis hearers. They both sat in most attentive attitudes, and each face wore an expression of puzzled astonishment. Not being able to reach their "inner consciousness," and read the mental comparisons there being drawn between this report and the very dissimilar summing up of the tramp detective, Mr. Belknap drew his inferences, as do we all, poor mortals that we are, seeing only the outside of the cup and platter. He saw the surprise, the puzzled look, that might denote a partial inability to grasp his thoughts and theories at once, and a feeling of satisfaction took possession of the breast of the astute detective. Pausing for a comment, and receiving none, he said, with dignified gravity :-"I trust that I have made my report sufficiently plain to you, ladies, and that you find no flaw in it.' Constance, who with her keen sense of the ridiculous, had been fancying the effect this report would have upon the detective in ambush, and struggling hard with her own risibilities, mastered herself finallly, and preserving her gravity of expression, replied with a wicked under current of meaning:-"It is quite plain to me, sir; I am poor critic of such matters, but I should think it a masterpiece for directness and comprehensiveness." "And you see nothing in the theory to object to? You think that working from these findings, there will be a hope of success?" he queried. Constance hesitated once more to consider her answer and collect herself gen-

"Why, you know, Mr. Belknap," she said at last, and with charming ingenuousness, "this is not a matter for my judgment; I rely upon you entirely; pray do not hesitate, but continue your investigations in whatever direction your judgment leads you. I wish Mr. Lamotte was here to confer with you; but, if he were here," and her face became sad as she thought of his home coming; "he would hardly be in spirits for such a consultation. Mr. Lamotte has bad news awaiting him. We must venture this matter without his aid for the present.'

The detective's face showed grave con-"Bad news for Mr. Lamotte," he murmurs; "I deeply deplore that. He seems such a genial, kindly gentleman, so much above the average business man. It is not too serious, I hope.' "It is something you would have heard from the first gossip, if you had mingled with the town people at all,' replied Constance sadly. "I may as well tell you what every one knows. Mr. Lamotte's only daughter has eloped during his absence, with a very worthless man.' "His only daughter!" repeated the detective in a hushed sympathetic voice; 'what a blow! what a bitter blow to a father's heart. Ah, madam," turning to Mrs. Aliston, "these things are common, especially so to men in my profession, but we can never adjust ourselves to them for all that; each one comes to some one with the shock of a never before experi- distinctly that one of them wore very enced horror. Death is common, the commonest thing of all but, it is the king of terrors' still.' His voice, low, splendidly modulated sadly cadenced, seemed thrilling with sympathy, and he sighed as he lowered his eyes to the floor, and relapsed into meditation, seemingly forgetful of the busines in hand. Sudddenly he started, seeming to re cover himself with an effort. "Pardon my abstraction," he said, a shade of pensiveness still lingering in his voice. "In contemplating another's sorrow, I am forgetting your business. I can only hope that this matter is not so bad as it might be, as such things sometimes "It's as bad as it can be," responded

Constance, gloomily. "It won't bear discussion; I mentioned it to you, Mr. Belknap, in order to show you how entirely absorbed Mr. Lamotte will of necessity be in his own affairs when he reaches home, and that we will be obliged to move in this matter without him.' "Perhaps there is some one else you may desire to consult in Mr. Lamotte's absence?" hazarded the private detective. "No," replied Constance; "my lawyer is out of town, and there is no one else upon whom I can rely. You must act alone, Mr. Belknap. Authorized by you I shall not hesitate to do so," he replied, bowing courteously. 'The case looks very clear to me. It will be a matter of time of course, these old birds are sly; but eventually they will try to market their wares, and then we shall have them. You can give me an accurate description of all the stolen jewels, Miss Wardour?" "Oh, certainly."

ective, before the young man could reply. "Mr. Lamotte, let me congratulate you; you have done well. This confirms my theory, and gives me something to start from when I reach the city. I shall go now with a light heart, and a more than moderate hope of success.'

"And is that all, Frank?"

"Then your business here is about accomplished?" asked Francis. "It is accomplished, thanks to you. I would like," glancing as he spoke, into his note book, "to talk this matter over with you further. It is possible I might see you again before leaving for the city. At present," he broke off abruptly, and

'at present you require my assistance about that list of jewels. Frank, you will remain here with Aunt Honor for a short time; she has, I think something to say to you. We will go to the library, Mr. Belknap," and she turned toward the "Don't hurry matters so, please," ex-

His business here being so WHY?-"Inferior brands pay larger profits,"-insist on having nearly done, the necessity for extra caution ceases does it not? At least, it would not injure the cause if I carry him over to Mapleton to luncheon; will it, think you? You won't leave for the city before night, Mr. Belknap, I hope?" "You are very good,' said the detective, with some hesitation. "But, if We claim this to be the best household Soap in the the world, you please, we will renew this subject a little later; now, just excuse me," and before the bewildered young man could raise his voice to intercept them, Constance and Mr. Belknap had passed from the room, and he found himself alone with Mrs, Aliston. Turning toward that lady, he was surprised at the look of intent pity she was bending on him, and, remembering the words of Constance, he came close beside her, say-

"You had something to say to me, madam?" "Yes, Frank," he almost started upon hearing his name falling so gently from her lips. She was not used to familiarity in addressing him. "Prepare yourself to LAR receive a shock, a terrible shock." A look of uneasiness, but not of alarm, came

"What is it?" he asked hastily. "Has Evan-done something worse than usual?" "Not to my knowledge. It is not Evan. "Not Evan, what then; tell me Mrs. Aliston," his face becoming paler and

"Frank, your sister has eloped!" He fell into the nearest chair, white and limp. "Go on," he whispered hoarsely, lifting a haggard face toward her; "tell me

-the worst, Mrs. Aliston. "She has eloped with John Burrill," went on Mrs. Aliston, a shade of coldness in her voice. "They ran away on Saturday afternoon.' His head dropped forward and fell upon the table before him. Thus for a moment he remained motionless, then went back and addressed the detective his voice broke the stillness, sounding faint and hollow. "Is that-all-you can tell me?" "All! Yes!" exclaimed Mrs. Aliston in a detective, "the eldest son of Mr. Laburst of nervousness. "I wish I had not motte, and brother of the young lady told you so much. Frank don't take it so who has brought trouble to herself and two days before, when he stood alone under the trees of Wardour Place, after his parting with Constance. Seeing that look upon his face, Mrs. Aliston went slowly towards the door, "I will send Constance to you," she said gently and went out, closing the door softly.

When he was alone the look upon Francis Lamotte's face became fierce and set. Springing to his feet he paced the floor like a mad man. "That letter," he hissed, "that accursed letter, what has it told? I must know! I must know the worst! blind fool that I was to let my own hand bring this about. Oh! this is horrible! Am I
