traced back only so far as his stay in W- had extended. Nothing could be found to prove that his career had been above reproach, previous to his sojourn here; hence, according to the reasoning of Mr. Belknap, it was fair to suppose that it had not been. "For," argued the astute private detective, "where there is secresy, there is also room for suspicion."

And Constance felt a momentary sinking of the heart, when she recalled the words she had overheard, as they fell from the lips of Clifford Heath: "Here,

I am Clifford Heath, from nowhere.'

Starting with a suspicion, the private de-ascertained beyond a doubt that Doctor Heath's expenses, taken all in all, were in excess of his professional income. He might have a private income, true; but this was not proven, and then there was a mystery that the accused had tried in

There was a correspondence that was car-

CHAPTER XXI.

Doctor Heath stood at his office looking out upon the street, and whistling softly. Below and directly under his gaze, stood a fine bay horse, harnessed to a new light road wagon; and horse and owner were somewhat impatiently waiting the arrival of Ray Vandyck, who was under engagement to drive with Doctor Heath, and pass his opinion on the "points" of the handsome bay, a recent purchase of the doctor's, who was a lover of a good horse and a fine dog, and was never without one or more speci-

How could she set the matter before him, as she wished him to see it? Seeing her hesitate, Ray unwittingly came to the rescue, and Constance seized upon the idea he gave her, with hasty agerness, little thinking of the results that were to follow her implied deceit. > truth, he has a right to be jealous, eh, Constance?" Here was a way out of her dilemma; let Ray imagine her engaged to Frank Lamotte, and he would not misconstrue her interest in Doctor Heath; as for Frank, he had been a suitor, and a most troublesome one, for so long that she thought nothing of appropriating him to herself, as a matter of convenience, and only for the moment, and she never thought at all of the injury she might do herself by this deception. "Oh, yes!" she replied; "I have given Frank the right to be as jealous as he pleases." And the hot blood flamed into her cheek, as she saw how readily he had taken her words as she had meant them to be understood. "Lamotte's a lucky fellow," said Ray, falthough I know a better man I would like to see in his shoes. But we won't quarrel over Frank. Is it him that I am

"Some strange things have come to my knowledge concerning Doctor Heath, Ray. They have come in such a manner that I would be in a measure violating the confidence of another were I to make a statement in full, and yet-in some way Doctor Heath must know that danger menances him." "Ah!" uttered Ray Vandyck, and Constance, lifting her eyes to his face, caught a fleeting look that caused her to ask suddenly:-"Ray have you heard anything about Doctor Heath? anything strange, I mean, or unexpected?" "Why," replied Ray, slowly. "I have othing very strange to relate, but-Heath's encounter with Burrill a short time since has made some talk."

"I don't understand you." Then is it not about this affair that you have sent for me?" "Ray, explain yourself. affair,' as you call it?" "Why, you see," began Ray, plunging into his recital after a fashion peculiar to himself, "about a week ago, yes, it was quite a week ago, on that stormy bluster-ing Monday night, when sensible people staid indoors, Heath, after the manner of doctors, was straggling about that lovely precinct known as Mill avenue, trying to find the shortest way out after paying a visit to some sick child, or wothe incomprehensible is the worst feature | man, I won't swear which; as I was saying, he was on his way out of that blessed avenue, when he heard screams coming from the cottage he was passing.
