Abdallah Pasha has ordered and prove which is the better man. his janizaries into the gardens-they There are plenty of excuses, but only Mackenzie's Medical Hall, have orders to cut and slay right and left, sparing no stranger whom they

The case looks dark, indeed, for our friends, as it will be utterly impossible for them to reach the beat now, even should they be so fortunate as to discover Sady, the flower of the harem. All that remains is to fight to the last and die as brave men should. Only for Aleck's mad infatuation they would ere this have been upon the water, and presently safe on board the yacht that lay there at anchor, her white wings spread ready to fly away at short notice. Blind love, indeed, that weaves such a net in which one's dearest friends are ensnared.

They rush along. Jack has learned from Achmed and his own observation where the entrance to the harem is lo eated, and he heads for that quarter. They are sure to find the door locked. What then? How can they burst it open, and storm through the luxurious quarters where Abdallah Pasha keeps his wives and slaves, terrifying one creature in all the world whose presence will convince poor foolish Aleck that it is his duty to flee.

Well, anything that can stand up before Jack's impetuous rush must be sturdy, indeed, and he has yet to see the door that there is not some means of throwing open. Doctor Jack knows the power of a diminutive dynamite cartridge, of which he carries several, packed in cotton, in his tebacco pouch. While they are in the midst of the rush, a figure suddenly confronts them. Doctor Jack's name is uttered, and he ecognizes Mercedes.

"You are lost-you cannot reach the toat. Enter here—there may be another way to save you," she exclaims. The wild shouts of the janizaries tell that they have formed a cordon around the stot, and are closing in. Ere three minutes have passed the soldiers of the Pasha will be walled around them, fierce fellows, too, ready to fight like "It is no use, Mercedes, we might have been safe, but Aleck would not save his own life and desert Sady,' cries Jack. "Caramba! what men you Amerierns are. Sady is in here with me. Enter quickly if you would not ruin

all. It is a trap-a snare for Abdallah in his own house. Quick, in the name of the Virgin! they are coming!" Doctor Jack resolves on the instant to trust all to Mercedes. He cannot wess what her plan is, or how visionary it may be, but the woman's wit may save them. They pass into a dimly lighted interior-Aleck utters a rey of joy, and folds Sady in his arms. The shouts grow louder. Mercedes is at the door. She beckons wildly. "This way, Don Carlos-Abdallahthey are here in a trap-this way!" Has she betrayed them? Jack knows better, for she has hastily given him the outline of her plan. One, two, three figures glide through the opening, then the heavy door is closed, the bar falls, and the last tableau in this strange act forms.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Larry is amazed, for he does not exactly comprehend matters, but having has spread his legs for the effort, and tions, he keeps an eye on that worthy, At the same time he has recognized the trio of forms that have glided into the room. They are, first of all, the Pasha, looking as black as a thunder fighter is merely insensible or has had cloud; Don Carlos, apparently only half-hearted in the business, and the matador, Pedro Vasquez, upon whose face is an expression that may be before the public of Madrid-sees and hates, if that can be, ten times more

So far as numbers go, they are unequally matched; but taking the dapper dude, the weak Aleck, with the old Achmed, and they would prove but a mouthful for Pedro Vasquez. Something besides numbers counts, and the revolvers in the hands of Jack and Larry carry the balance of power. They immediately cover their three eremies, who stand still, forming a peculiar group-a Turk and two Spanlards at bay, one of these latter a gentleman, the other possessing the

Instead of making us prisoners you have fallen temporarily into our power. Now listen to reasen. We desire to leave this place at once, and we shall take the Pasha to the end of his grounds as a prisoner of war in order to shield ourselves from his followers. He shall be released when we have the first chance at es-

He watches to see the effect on his hearers. Don Carlos is the only one unmoved, for his stake in this game is receives in his shoulder the leaden not so large as that of the others. The Pasha grinds his teeth, while wily Turk. Ere Aleck can draw back Pedro scolds and sneers. "Carajo!" he hisses, speaking Spanish because he can better express himself in his own language, which is well fitted for irony, "the valiant American

His manner cannot be described. It insulting, taunting, and makes Jack's blood boil. At another time he would have been at the man like an avalanche, why not now? True, there is much at stake, but Jack seems to forget that. He only remembers that this man has insulted him before his friends, and his blood becomes heated "Aleck, take this revolver. Cover the Pasha, and at one treacherous move send a bullet into his brain," and the other grasps the weapon with a cry of satisfaction, fastening his

"Come, I am impatient to depart Let us get this little circus over as soon as possible. I warn you, Pedro Vasquez, you will find my fall worse than a toss from the short horns of a black toro. Are you ready-bravo?" His words irritate and further enrage the bull-fighter, just as he intends. Jack has indeed no time to waste in this matter, and he hopes to expedite the affair. As he expects, the other rushes at him furiously. Jack has already selected his hold, and takes it-an old favourite of his. They stand there like two grand oaks, with muscles knotted and strain-Jack is testing the other's strength. In a bull-like way Pedro may be the stronger, but he dees not know how to manipulate his tremend-All watch them eagerly, though Aleck and Larry do not forget to keep an eye on the men over whom they have been placed as guards. Mercedes is intensely aroused--like all the women of Spain, she loves to see gladiators in the ring contesting for the supremacy, whether among themselves or with a flerce animal-a bull or a bear, perhaps a tiger. She adores Doctor Jack, and her sympathies are all excited in favour of him, but she has fears, seeing the more bulky frame of the bull-fighter, and not being posted with regard to the fine qualities of an athlete's figure.

Doctor Jack waits no longer. He has found out what he has to meet, and quickly foils several energetic whirls of the Spaniard, who has never yet met a man able to stand up before him in this way, and is decidedly amazed to find his fiercest efforts have no more effect on the American wrestler than had the other been a solid oak. Now it is Jack's turn. He gathers all his surplus energy for the endeav our, since time is so very valuable to him. Pedro understands that he is to be tested, and braces himself to meet the tug of war, but had a whirlwind struck him it could not have created greater havoc. He is torn from his feet, lifted bodily from the floor in spite of his tremendous powers. Jack a magnificent one it is the bulky Pedro is actually lifted over him, and tossed to the ground, striking partly

He sees at last | Carlos cannot but look with admiration the man who robbed him of his laurels | and awe upon the wonderful man he once called friend. The Pasha's face appears more ugly than ever at this affeat of his bravo, but Larry is exultant, and crows like a rooster in

"Victory! victory! well done, Doctor Jack. Three cheers for the Stars and Stripes. Hurrah-hur-," There he suddenly stops-he has a good reason for doing so, as the door of the apartment is burst in with a crash, and a corner. Men pour in through the opening. Doctor Jack realizes that the worst has come, and he without a veapon to meet it save those nature brawny frame and bull-like neck of gave him. He is not the kind to give up easily, and although the janizaries heap themselves upon him, he struggles desperately against the heavy odds, and Mercedes, watching his magnificent efforts, can hardly restrain the Aleck, when the grand climax takes place, has been seized with a desire to make use of his chance. It looks as though their portion would be death now, and he has not forgotten what he declared to be his desire-" one chance at that devil before I give up." He endeavours to take aim, and as the Pasha knows not his danger, it looks as though doem were about to settle upon him; but Satan cares for his own, and just at this opportune moment one of the janizaries passing by messenger intended for the brain of the rounced upon by the emissaries of the Pasha and held in hands of iron. All are secured but Jack. He has hurled his assailants from him thrice. does well to shield himself behind a like a mastiff shaking the water from small gun. He is safe there. Some of them are for slaying the unbeliever, and steel flashes in the light of the lamp, but Abdallah Pasha dreams of even a more terrible revenge-speedy death is too good for a man who has braved him in his own palace-he would torture the American even as he has Aleck, and make him experience the horrors of a living

So he shouts out hoarse orders-the janizaries know the temper of their master full well, and there is not one dares disobey him. The flashing steel vanishes, and they devote themselves toward overcoming him with physical

No one is watching Mercedes, and her face is a study. Her sympathies are with the American. Once she even starts toward him holding the revolver Larry has dropped, but restrains herself, knowing how futile it would be, since such an act must only be the signal for general carnage. She has a better card to play than that. All at once Doctor Jack ceases to struggle. The wonderful muscles become quiet, and he stands there breathing hard, yet looking around at his enemies undaunted. Three Turks hang upon each arm while half a dozen more await the least movement to hurl themselves upon his body. Abdallah Pasha looks pleased. He grasp. Like many another general, he jumps at conclusions without posilive proof, and in making his calcula-
