"I could write lots of experience since I left New York; things that no person would believe unless they had themselves been in like circumstances. Five of the Red Cross nurses who went to Cuba, returned to New York the other day on a troop ship bringing nearly 200 sick men. They had no food except regular army rations, beans, pork, etc., so the poor sick boys had to eat that or starve. Then they had no water except some taken on at Tampa, weeks and weeks before. Many of the sick lying on the floor without even a blauket to cover them, and of course numbers died. One doctor and five nurses—only one a trained nurse, the others being wealthy New York girls who had volunteered—had to take care of all these sick men, and they had not a drug on board. Talk about hardship! Things like these make one old before their time. To see men suffer and die through carelessuess on the part of those whose duty it is to see and good will towards men exist here. In fact I had forgotten all about it until one of my patients said, "Nurse, does this seem like Sunday to you?" Poor boy! he is not quite nineteen, but as he belonged to the state militia, rather than be thought a coward, when his company was called he responded. Many of them are mere boys. One I have been particularly interested in. He came to us awfully sick with typhoid, and I have worked so hard, for his case seemed so hopeless. We got him pretty well through that but I am afraid he will die in a few days. He is simply coughing his life away. A number of them develop quick consumption, for before we get them they lie in tents with the rain pouring down on them and their uniforms, their cots standing in mud. These are simple, plain facts, not overdrawn one bit. This boy is only their regret that circumstances have made | twenty-one, six feet tall and a handsome necessary the severance of your connection | fellow in health, but oh! the wreck! The tears often come to my eyes when I look at him. His whole back is a mass of holes with bed sores, which it seems impossible to heal for his blood is in such a condition. One night I changed him thirteen times. My back nearly broke for he is heavy although dreadfully thin.

Give my love to all the folks and do not worry about me. We, the ten nurses here, were called the pick of the lot. Now, don't you feel proud? I do. My trunk is in Brooklyn. In case I never go back, Mrs. McKay will send it home. I must close now and go to bed. Lovingly,

Yacht Race.

The postponed race of the Miramichi Yacht Club took place on Monday. There was only a light southwest wind but otherwise the weather conditions were favorable. The entries were Maude, Oriana, Spray and Thetis, the two last named having been added to the fleet this season. Commodore Miller's steam vacht Florence was Judges' boat and there was quite a large party of ladies on board-guests of Mrs. John W. Miller. The Judges were Hon. L. J. Tweedie and Messrs. W. A. Park and John Ferguson. The start was from an imaginary line between a steamer anchored in the stream off the Black Brook mill and building on the north shore of the river and was made at 3.19. The course was from Black Brook passing north of Murdoch's buoy, south of Napan buoy, turning Oak Point buoy to port, and return over the same course to the starting point-supposed distance, 10 miles. The whole distance was either free or close haul direct sailing, with exception of windward work of about two and a half miles and the yachts had the tide with them both ways, which was a fortunate circumstance, as otherwise it is not probable that the race would have been sailed at the prescribed rate. The wind was so light that the sails flapped through slackened tension caused by the slight swell in the lower bay, so that as a race it was rather tame and uninteresting, as the following official record shows: -

5,41.28 5.39.00 4.30.35 The two new boats proved decidedly dangerous rivals of the older flyers, as they both showed better speed than Maude on the run down for the Oak Point buoy, Spray passing her and promising to turn in second place, which she would have done, but for a mishap to her topsail which made it necess ary to lower her main peak After Big Game on the Miramichi within half a mile of the ing buoy. A study of will show that the performance of the four yachts on this occasion leaves their relative merits in the region of conjecture, for it is well known that Maude is faster than Oriana when there is a fair sailing breeze, and as the other two chased Mande so closely on Monday, both that yacht and Oriana will have to look to their laurels. The next race is to take place on 29th

September, and it is probable that each yacht will be allowed to carry whatever sails her skipper may determine upon. This seems to be necessary as the rule restricting canvas to working sails only is now disre-A skit on the irregularity was displayed by some of Maude's crew on Monday and it, the advisability of abandoning the disregard.

constant vigilance is necessary. An Official Report on Prohibition.

[New York Sun.]

Mr. Lyman, the state commissioner excise for New York, has taken the trouble to arrange a synopsis of the laws governing the liquor traffic in the United States, and he has added this information as an appendix to his annual report. The synopsis is a comprehensive survey of the liquor question as affected by legislation in the various states, and it yields instruction to those who are interested in this important problem whether as friends or foes of the traffic. The laws devised by the different states vary from prohibition in Maine to almost any thing in New Jersey. They indicate how each state has, in its own way, tried solve the problem of controlling and retricting the traffic in liquor, and they show, moreover, that the liquor laws of the states are as varied as the divorce laws, each state enacting such legislation as seemed proper for it, without regard to the legislation of other states. While Mr. Lyman does not assume to anything more than the facts and statutes he records his opinion, as a fair deduction from the different laws, that "the principle of local option in connexion with high license is growing in favor in all parts o the country, while absolute prohibition on the wane. He believes, furthermore that the fact is clearly established that the general tendency of state legislation is in the direction of the liquor law of this state, which embodies high license and local option both as a means of restricting the traffic and of raising revenue to repair the assaults and damages which the traffic makes upon society, with the additional features of dividing the excise revenues between th state and the locality where the tax collected, and of restraining the business the neighborhood of churches, schools, charitable and penal institutions. A survey of the liquor legislation states shows that prohibition has been tried in 17 states. In 10 of them it has been abandoned for high license and local option, and of the remaining seven "it is the universal testimony," declares Commissioner Lyman, "that the sale of liquor has not liminished in any of them." The first State to declare for absolute prohibition except for mechanical and medicinal puroses, was Maine, whose prohibitory law dates from June 2, 1851. It was repealed in 1855 and reenacted in 1857, and it is in force to-day, with the addition of many amend ments designed to make its provisions still more restrictive. What, then, does Maine's experience of practically forty-seven years demonstrate? In the city of Portland, where the influence of the law may fairly be considered as representative, it is stated by an ex-mayor that the law is a failure, leading to the establishment of club rooms fo drinking, gambling and other forms of vice, driving the liquor traffic into the home and kitchen, where children might easily be contaminated, and creating a condition of bribery, corruption and perjury in the evasion of the law, The same testimony was given by judges and clergymen, and in the home of Neal Dow, the author and de fender of the Maine law, there is to-day continuous traffic in liquor, surreptitiously conducted, not in saloons, but through various substitutes for the saloon, such as clubs, anothecary shops, hotels, bottling houses, express companies and pocket peddlers, who loiter about the streets and supply drinks to wayfarers. "Thus it seems, comments Commissioner Lyman, "that in the state where prohibition was born, and where it has been thoroughly and freely tried, it has completely failed to realize the hopes of its worthy advocates and pro

Let us observe what has been the result of prohibition in other states. New Hampshire is practicully a prohibition state, but there is plenty of proof that the law is violated. Any visitor to the White Mountains will testify to the ease with which the appetite for liquor may be assuaged at any of the great hotels and boarding houses. strict enforcement of the prohibition law there would mean a great loss of revenue to the hotel and inn keepers, an element that community by no means to be disre garded. In Vermont the sentiment of the state is strongly for prohibition, and the weight of evidence seems to be that the law is well enforced, and with beneficial results. Iowa is another prohibition state, made so by a general law and a constitutional amendment, and yet Commissioner Lyman vances the opinion that it is "conceded, even by friends of total abstinence, that prohibition has proved a failure." In the rural districts it is fairly well enforcbut in the river, towns cities it is openly violated. North Dakota and South Dakota are prohibition states, but their ence is too brief to be of distinct value, and the statistics are too loose and inacurate to constitutional amendment enjoining prohib It will be seen, therefore, that only in two of the seven prohibition states, Kansas an sale, as it is liable to close at any time; as by a large majority of the people and the law is apparently well enforced. Vermont, is the law strictly enforced an fairly observed. In the other states it evaded, and its evasion in states once addicted to prohibition, such as Massachu setts and Oregon, has led to an abandon nent of absolute prohibition and the sub stitution of the local option and high license plan. Indeed, this has been the steady tendency of the various states, and practically all of them have now embodied in their statutes the high license, local option and other general features of the New York law. A few states, like New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia and California, regulate the liquor traffic by local legislation, and two states, South Carolina and Georgia, operate under the and not yet permanently adopted as the policy of these states in the treatment of the liquor question

In 1815 the royal mews at Charing Cross were standing and on the actual site now occupied by Nelson's column a long wooden shed was placed, and in it was the skeleton of a whale of great limensions. Through it the writer walked from end to end. Opposite stood, as now they stand, spring gardens, where in old times the beaus and belles of the court of Charles II disported themselves. There in a house was located "the learned pig." Bystanders desirous of seeing its performance stood in a circle, and within a smaller one playing cards were apparently indiscriminately thrown down. Onlookers, possibly confederates, named a particular card, and the pig trotted round and placed his snout on the named card without an error.

The Girls Blushed Too. Visitors at the World's fair of 1893 will recall the Indian exhibit or encampment on the shore of the south pond. One of the tents or wigwams was occupied by an athletic and fine looking but somewhat taciturn specimen of young Indian manhood as his own particular home, and while it was open at all proper hours for the inspection of visitors he resented any approach to impertinent curiosity.

A bevy of young women dropped into his tent one day before his usual hour for opening it and found him sewing a rent in a blanket.

"See how he blushes," exclaimed one of the visitors. "We have caught him doing squaw's work."

"Why, that's his natural color," giggled another. "He always blushes." "Yes, young ladies," said the Indian in perfectly good English, "he blushes for some of the civilized and enlightened white Americans of the nineteenth

The visitors joined him in blushing and shortly afterward went out without further remarks. - Youth's Companion.

Is "By Jingo!" Basque?

Prince L. L. Bonaparte, many years ago, claimed "By jingo" as an English borrowing from the Basques. The Souletin Basques say "Bai Jinko," meaning "Yes, God," not "By God" or "Par Dieu." The k would easily become g in the mouth of a foreigner. Basque sailors and soldiers have always been ubiquitous. Some time ago I was at an inn at Larraina (the thrashing floor) in Soule, where the host, who had gained the queen's medal for service in the French army in the Crimean war, repeated "Bai Jinko" hundreds of times during the day. No doubt the Basques in the time of Rabelais, the first author to put Basque words in print (though he did so rather clumsily) had the same habit. It must always have attracted the attention of foreigners, who would readily imitate it .-Notes and Queries.

A Sorcerer Elected.

M. Legitimus, the new Socialist deputy from Guadeloupe in the French parliament, is a negro. He dresses in the latest fashion, wearing silk hat, patent leather shoes, white necktie and irreproachably cut frock coat. He believes in ghosts, witches and devils and is a famous sorcerer in his own country. In fact, he owed his election to his successful defeat of the devil by dancing and yelling for several hours in a cemetery. His ability in this line convinced the free and independent electors of Guadeloupe that their interests would be safe in his hands.

A false step, a fall or a sudden wrench is very often the cause of that painful straining of the fibrous tissue commonly known as sprain. The ankle is, as a rule, the victimized member, and many are the tedious hours for which the careless dispenser of orange peel can be held accountable. There are several methods of treating a sprained ankle, one of which is strapping the leg from ankle to knee with adhesive plaster. The plaster is cut in strips about an inch in width and of sufficient length to encircle the leg to within half an inch, the space being left to insure free circulation. This treatment can only be applied before the leg begins to swell, therefore within a very short time of the accident. Recovery by means of the ordinary treatment, that of elevating the foot and having recourse to hot applications, may be greatly accelerated by scientific massage. By proper manipulation the swelling can be reduced and the pain lessened in a very short time. If, however, the service of one who thoroughly understands giving the treatment cannot be obtained, simple rubbing will often give relief. The rubbing must always be up, not down, and the hands of the operator as well as the wounded limb should be made thoroughly antiseptic before any friction is applied, lest tissues.—New York Ledger.
