On Her Wedding Morn. BY CHARLOTTE M. BRAEME.

CHAPTER XIV. - "BLIGHTED, RUINED, MARRIED MY LIFE."

All went happily until July, and then came a terrible shock. Gerald Ashton died suddenly of old-standing heart disease, and Huldah was left a widow and sole mistress of his immense fortune.

It was a strange position. She was then only eighteen, and the sole heiress of a fortune of $100,000. The villa at Lyde was hers, and the Edinburgh mansion; hers also were the plate, the furniture, the accumulation of money that she had inherited.

And it was well that he accepted her request. The preparations all went on; the mansion was prepared; Lynders Park was made ready for the reception of the bride, and the wedding day was to be the 10th of April.

She—the proud beauty, "The Queen of the Nation," Gerald Ashton's heiress—clashed her arms round her mother's neck, and said, "I have no mother," she said, laying her beautiful face on the nurse's shoulder.

"Now come, Lewis," she said, "and see all my wedding attire; it lies ready in my dressing-room." "I shall not go long," said the young heiress. "Susanne, tell the lady I can not see her; whatever message she has must be sent by you."

"The lady insists upon seeing you, miss," he said. "I have no time to spare yourself untold shame, anguish, and remorse, send me to the church when you have seen me, you will understand that today's ceremony would be a wretched farce."

"I do not know," replied Huldah. "Before she had time for another word the door opened, and a tall, elegantly dressed woman entered. Her veil was thrown back, showing a pretty but somewhat faded face, and a quantity of fair hair.
