Spectacles
The undoubted advantages are claimed for Mackenzie's spectacles, 1st—That from the peculiar construction of the Glasses they Assist and Preserve the sight, rendering frequent changes unnecessary.
2nd—That they confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision, with an amount of Ease and Comfort not hitherto enjoyed by spectacle wearers.
3rd—That the material from which the Lenses are ground is manufactured especially for optical purposes, by Dr. Charles Parr's improved patent method, and is hard and Brilliant and not liable to become scratched.
4th—That the frames in which they are set, whether in Gold, Silver or Steel, are of the finest quality and finish, and guaranteed perfect in every respect.
The long evenings are here and you will want a pair of good glasses, so come to the Medical Hall and be properly fitted

That Student Girl.

A crotchety and contrary old chap was Dick Shellen, a rich old farmer, as stubborn as a mule. He had made his way in the world by the dogged obstinacy—seizing hold of whatever came his way, and retaining hold, as though life depended upon it.
Shellen had one son—a handsome, clear-headed young man—straight as a young larch, tall and as tenacious in his way, when he chose to have one, as old Dick himself. This son, as he grew up, had proved a great assistance to his father in working the farm, and his services had been made the most of.

The old man managed to keep him at home with him some time after he ought to have been doing for himself. Not an acre of his father's possessions was ever called his son's; he owned nothing, save a horse, which some neighbor had given him when it was a sickly colt, and some sheep obtained in much the same manner; and the old man grudged him the keeping of these.
Shellen and his son differed often, but there were two points in which the difference amounted to something serious. The first point concerned education, for which the old man had the most profound contempt, and the son had not. There was a college some dozen miles from the Shellen farm, and thither—having thoroughly prepared himself in spite of fatherly thwarting and opposition—Henry had taken himself, and by one contrivance and another, and helped by his mother's small marketing, kept himself there for several months.

The second point was not likely to be so easy of arrangement.
At college Henry had found something besides scholastic honors. He had chanced upon a very charming combination of curls and azure eyes, a red-lipped, dimpled-cheeked fairy, daughter of one of the professors who, instead of curving her dainty lip at the home-spun suit which his poverty and his father's niggardliness compelled him to wear, never seemed to be conscious of anything or anybody else who was near.

In short, Henry had found some one to love, some one that he wanted to marry, as he gravely informed his father, who, with some embarrassment, said, "My father is afraid that a daughter of Professor Halmstead would not make a very good farm wife."
"Does he think?" Bertha hesitated, looking with smiling perplexity at her little white hands. "He doesn't know much about baking, etc? Exactly; I believe he thinks that."
"Then he thinks wrong," said Bertha, reddening as she looked up at her lover with a comical little pout. "Didn't I hear you say you wanted a servant at home? I've a mind to go down and offer to take the place."
Henry laughed. "We want one badly enough, but my father will not suffer one inside the house."
"Why, how do you live then? Who cooks for you now that your mother is ill?"
"We do our own cooking," Henry said, with a return of the half-smiling, half-embarrassed expression. "We cook for ourselves or do without."
The very true that she was the one which witnessed this conversation Henry was at home busying himself over some culinary operations, when she came in, she was surprised to find a singularly attired form presented itself on the threshold. It wore a red and green plaid dress, the checks very large, a yellow shawl and a very tumbled white bonnet. A red feather, nearly as long as his arm, streamed from one side.

The face, what could be seen of it, was a very curious one to be inside such a bonnet. Her hair, which was outside, was rich, black, and fell in ringlets, and she had a very singularly large, and a singularly attired form presented itself on the threshold. It wore a red and green plaid dress, the checks very large, a yellow shawl and a very tumbled white bonnet. A red feather, nearly as long as his arm, streamed from one side.

"An would ye beafter employing a servant the day?" and stood fidgeting with the ratings of her shawl.
"I believe not," said Henry, coloring with some annoyance, perhaps, at the nature of his employment.
Henry looked at the girl, and that she said, "I'm very sorry, my good girl, but we do not wish to hire a servant."
"Belike your father mayn't object when he sees me," the girl replied.
"She gave him a note, which proved to be from Miss Halmstead. Henry read it with very lover-like carefulness, but shook his head.
"This remains a very good girl, but we do not wish to hire a servant."
"Belike your father mayn't object when he sees me," the girl replied.
