Church Missionary Meeting.

The chair was occupied by the Lord Bishop of Fredericton and prayer was said by Rev. Cauon Forsyth. The chairman made a brief opening address, in which he presented the idea of man's mission, from the Creation, to subdue the earth and he pointed out how he had done so by conquering all other living things and overcoming the forces of nature. Referring to the opportunities of nations to overcome the darkness of heathenism he instanced the failures of Portugal and Spain to do God's work and showed that Portugal was now the smallest of nations, while Spain had "shrun s into her shell like a shrivelled nut." Then, he pictured E aland's work in christianizing the world and pointed to her reward in her great possessions and position as the greatest power of the earth. He concluded by introducing ed such an important part of Sir Hibbert's elaborate bill of fare.

Since the debate in the House Mr. Ogilvie's report has been received. It is an exceedingly complete document, revealing the fact that a most searching investigation was carried on at Dawson, and the conclusion is that all the officials are exonerated from even the suspicion of wrongdoing. This leaves Sir Hibbert with scarcely a peg to support him, although the pugnacious knight has declared that Mr. Ogilvie was not a proper person to conduct the inquiry because Mr. Sifton was married to Mr. Ozilvie's wife's niece. Most people know, however.

that Mr. Ogilvie is a man of irreproachable character, possessed of a strong personality, and is entirely independent of the Government. It cannot be assum-

He referred to the work of the Wesleys, priests of the Church of England, and said that good John Wesley, while working with zeal to reform the church, held back his people from severng themselves from it and so enjoined then at his death. John and Charles Wesley of that little Oxford band were the genesis of the missionary movement in the Church of Dun England.

The speaker traced the other great misionary movements of the church in England and contrasted the means and methods of DUN the earlier missionary enterprises with those of to-day and drew pictures of the christianizing agencies of the church everywhere, referring to the two boards of missions of
