At the same time I received a full "history of his character, which his record "here has more than fully justified."

What a wonderful indictment! It is as much of a curiosity as Dr. Benson's modest reference to his own "quiet, unobtrusive manner of life," of which he furnishes an illustration in his "quiet and un btrusive" conference twenty four years ago with an unnamed but apparently congenial slanderer of one whose social and business friend the doctor professed to be up to the comparatively short time ago, when the friend committed the unpardonable sin of supporting a candidate other than the doctor for the mayorality. We have heard the self-styled "quiet and unobtrusive"doctor referred to as "a superficially educated intellectual "mediocrity of gentlemanly deportment," and once had doubts as to the correctness of the description, but that letter of his in last Saturday's World suggests its verity, save the latter part of it.

As to his endeavor to bring in any others save himself and his nephew and mouthpiece, who conducts what his letter shows to be a sheet representing his sentiments towards the writer, it is simply cowardly. He does so because he isu't manly enough to take the responsibility of his own work. As to the viler languige of the doctor's letter, which is calculated to lower him the estimation of all right-thicking persons. we can well afford to leave it and its author to the judgment of his fellow citizens. $1.00 a year We do not propose to retort in kind or to notice the similar blackguardism of his insignificant nephew, or his co-laborer in vilification -the editer of the World. We are always, careful to preserve the to Benson,-Stewart tactics. Having had the doctor proclaim himself in his real character.
