There was little that was humorous in the joke played on a bridegroom in a village near Lyons last vear. The bridegroom had been notoriously inconstant in his affections, and on the eve of his wedding-day he was waylaid on his way home from seeing his bride of the morrow by three of his jilted lady-lovers, armed with stout sticks. Before the interview came to an end they had administered such a "striking" proof of their regard that an hour later their recreant lover was found still insensible and covered with bruises by the roadside

Even more grim, if less painful, was a joke practised on a bridal couple some time ago in the West country. Just as the ceremony was on the point of beginning in church. a mourning coach drew up at the door, and a procession of half a dozen men, all in deep mourning, filed up the aisle and took seats in a pew immediately behind the weddingguests. They followed the service with dejected mien and simulated tears, and at its conclusion as solemnly filed out again and drove off. The mourners consisted of two rejected lovers of the bride and four of their friends, who had chosen this singular method of burying their tove and grief-and, incidentally, of paying off old scores .- London Tit-Bits.
